OWEN WISTER PRAISES SINGING AMONG SOLDIERS

Army Choruses Valuable Aids to Fighting Spirit, Says Novelist—How Our Fighting Men Take Hold of Musical Work—Ragtime Not Liked.

By OWEN WISTER.

THE application of music to war is as old as mankind and as young as today. In museums you will see among archaic chattels the savage battleaxe, with the savage drum; at this moment in France the strains of the "Marseillaise" commingle with the explosions of bombs. Throughout the whole of man's chronicled experience, anywhere you look, evidence is overwhelming that songs and music have companioned war as inevitably as have flags and banners, and for precisely the same reason: because they are necessary; because at certain moments they invigorate and rally as nothing else ever has invigorated or ever can invigorate and rally the fighting spirit of man. A flag is a visible banner, a song is an audible banner.

Americans now living both in the North and South do not need to be told this. They can recall easily enough days and nights when "Dixie," or "Maryland, My Maryland," or "Marching Through Georgia," or "John Brown's Body" smote them like an inspiration, and they went on. With the Northern and Southern songs of our civil war still ringing in hundreds of brains, does it not seem a little odd that anybody should have failed to know that music is of practical value in winning battles? Yet in the face of these facts so easy to know, so long known, proved again and again in every great war, doubt has been expressed. Music for the soldier has been styled a "luxury."

Persons who daily display but slight interest in economy have hemmed and hawed over the extravagance of providing the apparatus for teaching our soldiers and sailors to chorus "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Were they aware that nothing so unifies men as lifting their voices together? Is the lesson of our football games with the drilled cheers lost upon them? What do they think of the fact, if they have found it out, that in France our army has been called the silent army?

Happily, the doubters decrease. It was indeed an innovation that individuals hitherto unknown to our army and navy should now appear at our various naval and military stations, armed with a pitch pipe and a little book, and explaining that they had come to drill the men in song. But this appearance no longer raises among the commanding officers and the men that surprise not unmingled with antagonism which was met here and there in the early days of the experiment.

Experiment it no longer is. This the weekly reports of the song leaders from the various army and navy stations make quite plain. These song leaders have been at their work hard and zealously since November. They have found out every sort of thing that can result from the innumerable differences in human nature. But in the end they have all found out one thing, namely, that the army and navy are no special kind of man, but merely a cross section of the American people, responding to exactly the same appeals that any men respond to.

Sometimes they have been welcomed at once, sometimes they had to win their welcome; every commanding officer is not immediately aware that songs are like banners and belong to an army's fighting equipment. These song leaders of army and navy camp music were also at first sometimes confused with the organizers of camp recreation. This confusion has almost disappeared. More and more clearly it is becoming understood that both activities—camp recreation and military song drill—have their places, but that their objects are different.

One is for entertainment, here, the other for the trenches, there. One is to relieve the monotony of such leisure time as the soldier has in camp, to fill this time wholesomely with plays, recitations, concerts, and the like, while the other is strictly a military measure, and its object to make the soldier a better fighter.

What follows is drawn from the experiences of the song leaders in army and navy camps, and in all parts of the country. It does not touch upon the equally important matter of instrumental music. That would require a chapter to itself. Enough here to say that General Pershing has found our great need, and has in consequence asked for a broad development of military bands and music. We stand no comparison with our allies in this. Their bands are larger, better, and play a higher grade of music for the most part. The National Committee on Army and Navy Camp Music is busily working at this by no means simple problem, as well as on the training in singing. Three elements make a song: swing, tune, words. Any of these may evoke the emotion needful to the song's vitality. When all three combine the song may outlive many generations. Of the three elements, words on the whole are the least important.

For a camp song nobody can make good words or good music unless he is in hot blood, and nobody can tell if it is good or not until he has thoroughly tried it out with a crowd of enlisted men. "Thoroughly" depends both on the song and singers; some songs make their way slowly and surely, and those which immediately succeed may have staying powers or may not. Try them out. Give each its chance to sink or swim. Enlarge your field of selection. Give the men, along with the songs of the hour and the few national songs that we possess, songs of other countries that have stood the test with their own people—Scotch, Irish, French. It is interesting to know that many enlisted men have themselves requested to be taught the "Marseillaise" in French.

But don't stop here. Enlarge the soldier's song horizon. Try him with tried songs he has hitherto had no chance to know. If the original words are an obstacle, get somebody to write new ones—but somebody whose emotion is awakened by the tune alone.

For success the song leader must have one quality to help him from within and one external help: he must possess, even more than a voice and an ear, that sense of rhythm and that power of making enthusiasm contagious to be seen in those who lead cheers at football games. Without this all the musical gift in the world will not suffice. And without the backing of the commanding officer he can make but little headway. Perhaps nothing covers the matter better than some remarks of Major Gen. Wood:

"It is just as essential that the soldiers know how to sing as it is that they carry rifles and know how to shoot them. • • • There isn't anything in the world, even letters from home, that will raise a soldier's spirits like a good, catchy, marching tune. • • • I have seen men toiling for hours through the mud and rain, every one of them dejected, spiritless, tired, and cold, wet and forlorn, cursing the day they entered the army, transformed into a happy, devil-may-care frame of mind through a song. • • • We hope every man in training will be a singer."

The Colonel of an infantry regiment wrote lately to the song leader:

"Many men find it almost impossible to accustom themselves to the call for a sudden, definite and accurate salute, or to exactness of a kindred kind. Some of them have never sung jolly songs with strong emphasis and marked attack of words. Some of them start from their barracks to the post exchange without knowing just what route they will take. It is such indefiniteness, such hesitation, such lack of appreciation that proper lectures, close order drill, salutes, and your singing instruction drive away, replacing them with springiness, a definiteness, and a new sort of self-appreciation that make some of the new men strangers to themselves."

Necessarily the manner in which each song leader attacks his task is controlled by the place he is in and the varying characters of the men he is teaching. All sorts of ingenious expedients have been hit upon. Sometimes a Chautauqua tent is handy. Here, entertainments are given and advantage taken of the presence of an audience. Sometimes a Y. M. C. A. auditorium is used in like manner. Minstrel shows are got up and the men rehearsed for these. The presence of Harry Lauder has served, just as the presence of Alma Gluck served, as the occasion for a soldiers' chorus. The men have sung to him, and in return he has sung a new song to them and taught them the chorus on the spot.

Concerning the songs themselves which are being taught, much could be said, and some of it is here given for its interest. Poor songs have a brief life. But if a poor song has lived its day let it not be replaced by another poor song, equally shortlived, if this can be helped. Sometimes it cannot be helped. Here circumstances and the tact and taste of the song leader must decide the question. Only, as has been said above, let the soldier's song horizon be enlarged by good songs whenever and wherever possible.

To the "Marseillaise," which some of the men have themselves asked to be taught, let other songs of our allies gradually be added. Our allies will wish to hear us sing our native songs which they do not know, but to hear us singing some of their native songs, which they do know, will have a happy effect. At a conference of the army and navy song leaders of the Northeast District, held in New York Feb. 11 and 12, it was agreed that, whatever additional song material might be used in various camps, every American soldier, sailor, and marine should be able to sing the following songs: "America," "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Marseillaise," "Old Folks at Home," "Old Black Joe," and "Kentucky Home."

Songs of boastfulness are not encouraged. Such a song caused a concert to be given by men from a certain camp to be canceled. At a navy yard in Virginia experience shows that the men care more for the type of song like "Old Kentucky Home" than for what is termed ragtime. This will prove to be the general case. In the hands of a master, ragtime has certain possibilities, though these are very limited; but masters are not common and most ragtime songs are made by people without talent and with no particular aim but a commercial one. The songs that issue from such machinery sometimes reach a certain vogue through being pushed by musical shows and by advertisement. If they happen to please the men for a moment, they must be given to the men. As has been seen, they hang themselves with their own rope and fall back in the presence of genuinely good songs.

A happy thought has occurred to those who remembered our old chanteys. The passing of the merchant sailor extinguished these splendid examples of inspiring rhythm and melody. There is now a fair prospect of their being restored to their place in the national heart.

The soldiers' repertory may be considered in a state of transition, a state of change, not likely ever to become fixed. Nor is it desirable that it should; but however varying its items, it should be always of a composite character, a repertory of grave songs and gay, of tender songs and bold, to suit the many circumstances and the many moods in which the soldier finds himself.

From one of the camps where singing awakened cordiality in a neighboring town the song leader writes: "In the depot brigade there are over 3,000 aliens. I have had nine of the twelve battalions in the brigade singing, each for forty-five minutes; the other three battalions consist of colored men, and they frequent the Y hut to a great extent and sing there with me. There will be meetings of the various groups of aliens, Poles, Hungarians, Austrians, Russians, for the purpose of encouraging them to sing their own songs. We expect to help the work in English, too, by writing English words for the foreign songs."

Confronted with a foreign regiment, without knowing it, another song leader was puzzled by their lack of response. As soon as he realized the difficulty he chose "America," "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," repeating the words of each with care and emphasis, and adding a few words of loyal exhortation: These men thus addressed, though they were not familiar with English, followed the song leader's meaning and joined in the songs with zest. The comment of the commanding officer was that these foreign-born men had been made Americans through song. Perhaps not completely with such suddenness; but with repetition, the Americanization thus begun might become complete.

Concerning the National Committee on Army and Navy Camp Music by which necessary parts of this large work are carried on, a few words will suffice. Its nine members, among whom are professional composers and musicians, hold meetings from time to time, for the most part in New York, though the members come from various cities. At these meetings the business of the committee is discussed and transacted. Reports are read and news from the various camps communicated. Such matters as are necessary are communicated to the Department at Washington by the member of the committee who is also of the War and Navy Department Commissions. He, with certain other members of the committee, has visited many of the camps to confer with the various song leaders there and be present at their work. These visits will continue. Conferences between the committee and the song leaders have also been held in New York.

FINANCING STATE'S BIG BARGE CANAL

By EUGENE M. TRAVIS,
State Controller.

NO single undertaking by the State has accomplished more to lay the foundation of New York's commercial, financial, and manufacturing supremacy than the building of the Erie Canal, which is to be dedicated next Wednesday. In fact, no other project has done more to stimulate trade and industry here and increase our wealth and population, while every measurement applied testifies alike to its value. Now when its improved use is about to be extended beyond the confines of the State in demonstrating to the nation and our allies in this great war an emergency use, a review of what these recent improvements have cost the Commonwealth may prove of interest and value.

The need of an enlarged canal was first emphasized more than thirty-five years ago when the immense traffic between the Western States and the Atlantic seaboard revived the question of cheaper transportation methods. More than half the country's population, therefore, has been directly interested in the enlargement of this artificial waterway which held in check the railroad freight rates. Because the old canal was inadequate to handle the increasing traffic and control the rates, many radical changes were then advocated.

The first official report advocating the present 1,000-ton brage canal was made about 1892 by the Canal Board. Two years afterward the Constitutional Convention proposed an amendment authorizing the legislation to improve the canal, the cost to be met by appropriations from the Treasury or by annual tax. Subsequent ratification of this amendment by a large majority of the voters of the State indicated popular approval of canal improvement, and the Legislature undertook at once to make provision.

The next year a bill was introduced providing for the issuance of $9,000,000 4 per cent. seventeen-year bonds to be sold at not less than par, in lots of not more than $4,000,000 at one time. All premiums received at the sale were to be put back in the sinking fund which was established by an annual tax levy of 13-100 of a mill. This measure was immediately ratified by the people, and $3,770,000 ten-year 3 per cent. bonds were sold by the State Controller in 1896 at a profit of $10,378.

During the ensuing year, however, it became apparent that more than $9,000,000 would be required, and the commission appointed to investigate reported that the original estimates of $12,500,000 had been arbitrarily reduced to $9,000,000 by the Legislature. The report also raised the estimate cost to $16,000,000. Subsequently an exhaustive survey was made by another special commission, which estimated the cost of five different routes to vary from $25,000,000 to $110,000,000.

The Barge Canal act, which was a direct outcome of this investigation, was enacted in 1903 and later approved by popular ratification. The measure provided originally for the issuance of $101,000,000 worth of eighteen-year 3 per cent. bonds, not more than $10,000,000 to be issued at any one time. At the first sale of $2,000,000 in 1905 a premium of $46,280 was realized. That year an amendment lengthened the term from eighteen to fifty years before these bonds matured.

This change in maturity was found necessary, as computation showed that the annual charge of the shorter term notes was more than $3,500,000 greater. Besides, such extension of time of payment proved more just and equitable in that it obligated future generations to contribute toward the payment of this permanent form of improvement. As a result all bonds issued after 1905 were fifty-year, and four years later $7,000,000 3 per cent. bonds were authorized, the rate afterward being changed to 4 per cent. and 4½ per cent. for the Cayuga and Seneca Barge Canal branches.

The canal debt on May 1 was $148,000,060, and there are $6,800,000 worth of bonds authorized for barge canal terminals not yet issued. The total expenditures for the new Barge Canal have been $233,695,350.90, disributed as follows:

Construction, $134,723,217.73, (of which there was expended for Erie, Champlain, and Oswego, $117,426,855.40; Cayuga and Seneca, $7,029,541.10, and Barge Canal terminals, $10,266,841.23.)

Maintenance and repair, 1895-1918, $36,077,480.60.

The total contributions to the canal debt sinking funds amounted to $62,804,702.66 from 1897 to May 1, 1918.

A word in conclusion as to the methods of providing for the payment of this gigantic undertaking. The Constitution provides that a tax shall be levied every year for sinking fund purposes until the debt is cancelled. The amount of this tax is not fixed nor any provisions made to prevent the accumulation of a sinking fund in a shorter period than fifty years, although the framers had probably intended to spread out the contributions to the full length of the term. Moreover, the Constitution makes no allowance for the increase in the assessed valuation of real and personal property which would proportionately decrease the rate, with the result of an excess accumulation in the canal debt sinking fund of more than $25,000,000.

John Coats Takes a Bath.

For the space of one minute all the lights in Marion, Ind., recently went out and all institutions depending on Marion current for operating were stilled, all because John Coats, while taking his regular Saturday evening bath at his home, got hold of a live wire in attempting to shake into life a defunct electric light globe and could not let go. Standing in the water with 110 volts coursing through his body, all Coats could do was to yell for help. A neighbor quickly discovered Coats's plight and telephoned the light company, which turned off all current. Mr. Coats was in a serious nervous condition for some time afterward, but suffered no serious injury.—Electrical Experimenter.

NOVEL CASES IN THE COURTS

CURBSTONE LAW," is the subject of an article in Case and Comment by Joseph L. Hooper, who points out that ideas of the law held by millions of persons throughout the country on what they believe to be absolutely reliable authority are based only on tradition. Mr. Hooper says it is "that rule of conduct prescribed, practiced, and believed in by about nine-tenths of the inhabitants of the United States." He calls it the quintessence of the common law—the commonest common law. It rests purely on tradition; it has only the sanction of its votaries, but it is a legal system as certainly as the Code Napoleon." Among the maxims of curbstone law laid down by the writer are the following:

Curbstone law forbids one man to strike another who is wearing eyeglasses. To hit a man wearing glasses is a felony, punishable by imprisonment for a long term of years.

Under the provisions of curbstone law a witness may not testify to acts seen through a pane of glass. In other words, if you are sitting in a hotel window and see a murder committed in the street, you may not, as a witness, give your version of the crime.

Another interesting maxim of this great system is this: "A woman's word goes further'n a man's in court." If a woman witness says a thing is so, and a man witness says it isn't, the woman must be believed. Not may be—must be. To us students of other systems who look on women witnesses as so many Sapphiras this seems passing strange; but to the curbstone lawyer it is gospel.

If a man owes you a bill and you dun him for it on Sunday, that cancels the bill. This is equally true if you dun him over the telephone. If a landlord serves his tenant a notice to quit, the tenant need pay no more rent, even if he stays on for a month. The notice absolves him. A prosecuting attorney must advise everybody and try every one's case for nothing, whether the matter is civil or criminal. If you want to collect a bill, and don't care to hire a lawyer, the prosecutor must "take it up on behalf of the people." If your lawyer fails to win your case you may, with cheerful impunity, fail to pay him for his services.

You must bequeath at least a dollar to each of your children, or your last will and testament is void. Many a would-be will breaker huskily breathes this maxim into your patient ear. It is useless to argue with him, and more useless with her, for this is one point on which curbstone authority is adamant.

The manufacture of wine by a person for his own use is held in the Washington case of State v. Fabbri, 167 Pac. 133, annotated in L. R. A. 1918A, 416, to be within a statute making it unlawful for any person to manufacture, sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish, or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquor or to keep any intoxicating liquor with intent to sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish, or otherwise dispose of the same, the words "with intent" not referring back to the word "manufacture."

"We think," observed the court, "that the manufacturing of intoxicating liquor, though only with intent on the part of the manufacturer to consume it himself, is an offense within the plain language of this statute."

An injury to a salesman whose duties require him to travel about the country on cars and call on customers caused by slipping on ice in the street when walking to the place where he expected to board a car from a customer's residence is held not to arise out of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation act, in re Donahue, L. R. A., 1918A, 215.

In Towno v. Elsner, (decided Jan. 7, 1918, U. S. Adv. Ops. 1917, p. 183,) a suit to recover the amount of a tax paid in duress, in respect of a stock dividend alleged by the Government to be income. Mr. Justice Holmes, in discussing the Government's motion to dismiss the case for want of jurisdiction, on the ground that the only question involved is the construction of the statute, not its constitutionality, quaintly observes: "But it is not necessarily true that income means the same thing in the Constitution and the act. A word is not a crystal, transparent and unchanged; it is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content according to the circumstances and the time in which it is used."

A situation out of the ordinary is presented in the Iowa case of Hughes v. Samuels, 159 N. W. 580, in which the court decides that the mailing by one undertaker to a person whose wife was critically ill of an advertising card purporting to be sent by a business rival in the same town, and calling attention to the latter's undertaking business, and signed with the latter's name, might be found to be libelous under a statute providing that "a libel is the malicious defamation of a person, made public by any" writing "tending to provoke him to wrath or expose him to public hatred, contempt or ridicule, to deprive him of the benefits of public confidence and social intercourse."

MILITARY CRITIC ON NEXT PHASE OF THE GREAT BATTLE

Germans Must Strike Either in Picardy or Flanders to Improve Their Position—Not Likely to Help Austrians Attack Italy

Cavalry Still Important in Spite of All the New Developments in War

BY A MILITARY EXPERT.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

THE fighting during the last week has been to a large extent barren of interest. There have been several small attacks for purely local objectives, but nothing that in any way can be considered as a renewal of the German offensive. Just what Germany's plans for this renewal are no one can even make an intelligent guess. Her situation in the west is far from being comfortable and is one that cannot be maintained without a material change in the formation of her battleline.

To drive a salient into an enemy's lines is often an advantage if it is followed up by a widening process which gives the troops which occupy it space in which to manoeuvre. But if it cannot be widened it is apt to be a source of extreme danger. This is the general situation which confronts the Germans both in the north and in the south. Whatever their plans must be, therefore, they must involve a widening of the bases of the two salients.

In the north the situation is peculiarly exacting by virtue of the depth of the wedge in relation to the short distance between the heels at the base. This is further aggravated by the topographical advantages which are against the Germans. Beginning at Messines Ridge and extending west, there is a long line of hill positions, all of which the Allies hold except the most easterly point at Kemmel Hill. Beginning at Vimy Ridge and extending northwest there is another ridge jutting out of the plains, all of which is in British hands. Between these two ridges are the Germans. They cannot advance at the point, as matters stand, since the further westward they go the sharper becomes the point of the wedge and the closer to its sides are the two ridges which eventually almost meet. The Germans cannot stand still, because they are down in the plain of French Flanders where every move they make is visible to the Allies on the northern bank of heights. It is impossible for them to make any concentrations of men or of guns, for, at the first attempts, they will come immediately under the fire of the British and French artillery on the heights.

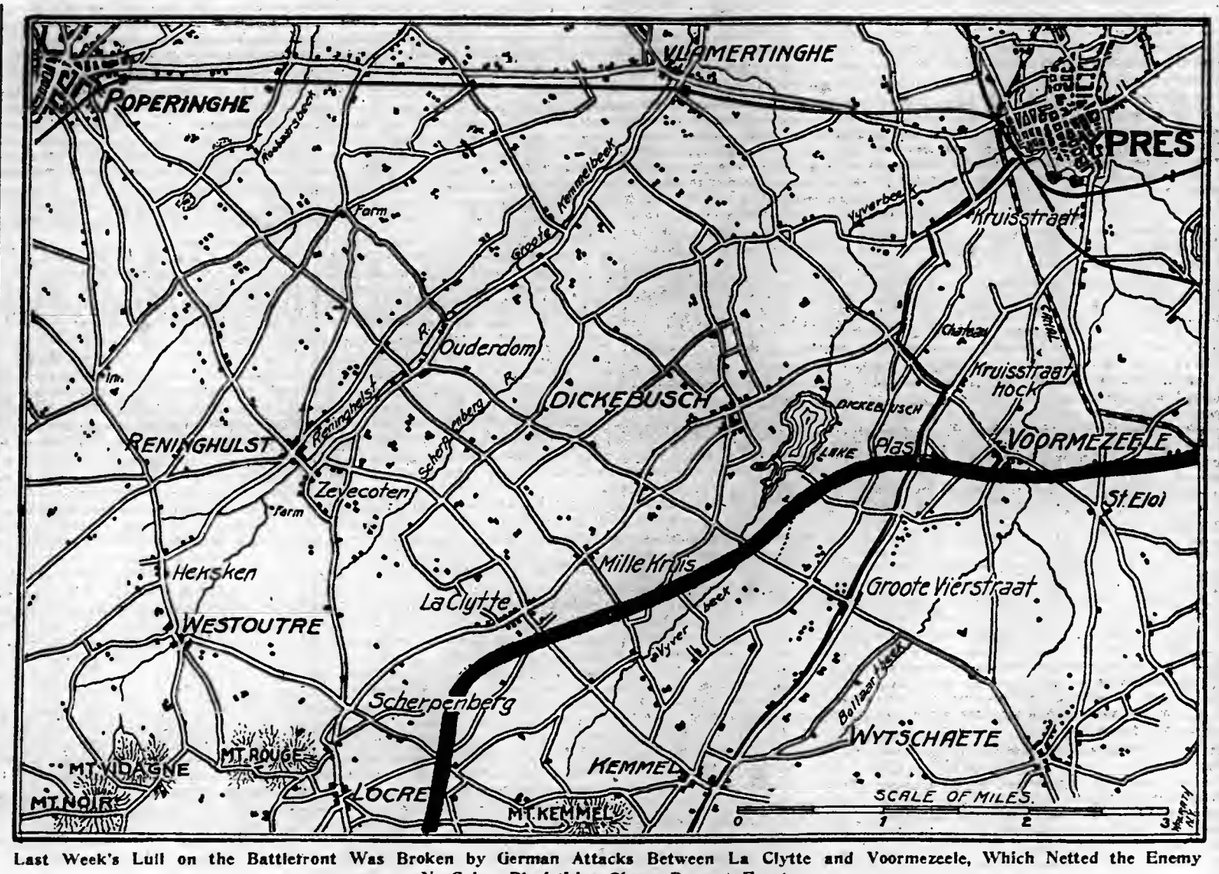
On the southern leg of the salient the same situation exists. In fact, there is scarcely a point which from one side or the other does not come within the vision of the allied observation posts. Since, then, Germany cannot advance at the point and cannot remain where she is, there remains the problem of breaking through one of the sides and so extending the possible front of operation.

FIGHTING IN THE NORTH.

The fighting which took place about this northern salient during the week was apparently designed to secure a local betterment of position, and, at the same time, to feel out the British strength at various points. The principal one of these attacks was on the Flanders front between La Clytte and Voormezeele. The Germans in this attack used two divisions and, while the attacks on the two flanks of the front engaged were not pushed, that in the centre continued for several days.

The main point of attack was about Vierstraat. This village is located near the tip of the spur which branches off from the main ridge between Messines and Kemmel toward the eastern side of Lake Dickebusch. It is limited on the north by Ridge Wood, a small clump of trees about which there has been the heaviest kind of fighting since the German offensive in Flanders began. The object of the Germans here was to push the British off this high ground down into the plain on the north. This would have represented a gain of but a few hundred yards, but it would have put the Germans further to the rear of the Mont Scherpenberg positions, which would in itself have placed them in a much better position for a subsequent attack when the offensive on a large scale reopened.

At the central point of the attack the Germans succeeded in forcing their way forward, but somewhat later a counterattack restored the British lines and the fighting ceased without result. Later another attack was delivered a little further west, just north of Kemmel. This attack passed through the same stages as did the first. There was an initial gain followed by a countereffort which restored the old positions, after which the fighting died down. The week's result is that, on this front, there has been no change in the situation.



Last Week's Lull on the Battlefront Was Broken by German Attacks Between La Clytte and Voormezeele, Which Netted the Enemy No Gain. Black Line Shows Present Front.

ALLIES GAIN IN SOUTH.

In the south the initiative has been with the Allies during the whole week. The British have maintained a more or less consistent pressure against the German lines between the Somme and the Ancre and between the Somme and the Avre. The allied lines here have been pushed eastward somewhat and the positions bettered through obtaining a firmer grip on the various plateaus across which the lines run. The general situation, however, is much the same as it was last week.

The persistent inactivity of the last two weeks has in a measure left us completely in the dark as to just what is happening or is about to happen. The Germans, it would appear, had, as their greatest chance of success, speed in the attack, following up each blow with another, leaving no appreciable intermission between them. Delay, it was argued, would be fatal, as it would give the Allies a chance to dig in and make the German task much more difficult than it was when the offensive began.

There is, of course, an element of truth in this. Obviously the Allies can no longer be taken by surprise. The German attack, when it is resumed, must follow along the line of previous efforts, and be kept within the narrow limits fixed by the Germans themselves. It would not in any way further the consummation of their plans for them to strike in a new quarter. It would, indeed, be but a confession of their own weakness and an admission that their great offensive, which had been so widely advertised, was a failure. It is known, then, that the attack must come either in Flanders or along the Somme fronts. The situation in Flanders is well understood. The Germans must break through one or the other of the line of heights by which they are penned in.

SITUATION AROUND AMIENS.

On the southern front the situation is much more simple, at least up to a certain point. Between the Ancre and the Noye Rivers, which territory is the vital sector of the southern part of the line, the country is very heavily rolling and is well cut up with streams of varying size, all, however, radiating to a common centre—the Somme between Moreuil and Amiens. There is a series of angles formed by the various river junctions into which the Germans must go. They are astride all of the streams except the Noye River, a fact which, of course, operates in their favor, as the rivers cannot be considered as defensive barriers behind which the Allies, if forced to retreat, can take refuge. At the same time there is the disadvantage of inability to secure close co-operation between the various army groups into which the rivers divide the German line. The banks of all of the streams in question have the same characteristics.

The ground rises very sharply from the banks until it reaches a plateau of considerable size, the plateaus being crossed by the battlelines, as these lines extend from north to south. There are, consequently, many good defensive positions to which retirement can be made if need be. The principal difficulty of the German position, however, is not the defensive position behind which the Allies can stand if driven out of their present lines, but the apparent advantage of being astride of the rivers.

In order to throw the Allies into the state of confusion necessary for a material advance in this section of the front, the Germans cannot content themselves with an advance into any single one of the angles between the rivers. To do this would merely create a number of sharp definitely limited salients, each of which would be a point of danger by reason of the fact that it could be practically ruined by artillery fire from all sides. And yet, to advance on a wide front, is an operation which requires the closest kind of co-operation between all units. It is difficult to see just how such co-operation is obtainable in a line divided into numerous parts by topographical obstacles. Nevertheless, it is consistently reported that the bulk of the German forces in France is concentrated on the Somme front between the Somme and Arras.

This is certainly a most important section of the line. Bitter fighting lasted about Bucquoy for many days. This fighting was designed to flank the defenses of Arras—the heights of Notre Dame de Lorette and of Vimy. It is upon these defenses that the British strength on the southern side of the Flanders front rests. This, therefore, would be a logical point of attack, as it would accomplish, if successful, the double object of widening both the Flanders salient and the front on the south. There has been no indication, however, other than the reported concentration of German divisions, that this is the section which is to receive the next German blow. It has, indeed, been the most quiet sector of all the long German front of attack.

There have been numerous bombardments along other parts of the line. In Flanders, at all points of the salient and particularly along the river Lys near where it divides the battleline, between the Somme and the Avre and along the Avre, there have been periods of heavy cannonading. But the section north of the Somme has been almost entirely free from molestation. But this is without any special significance, since, if the Germans intended to attack on this front, there would not necessarily be much artillery firing until the attack was about to be launched.

MAY FOE ATTACK IN ITALY?

There is the feeling in some quarters that the Germans, realizing that they are held fast on the front in France, are preparing a diversion from the real point of attack and are concentrating for an attack against Italy through the Trentino. This does not appear likely. It is entirely possible that an offensive against Italy may break out. But it is not probable that this will mean a cessation of the fighting in France. While the Germans have met with a check, and a very decided check at that, they have not yet been defeated by any means, but, on the contrary, still possess the ability to strike again and with practically the same strength as they did six weeks ago. They surely are not ready to acknowledge the defeat of their great effort to end the war.

To attack Italy at the expense of the front in France would be equivalent to such an acknowledgment. Germany cannot do both. In spite of the fact that practically all of her available forces are concentrated in the west, she has not sufficient strength to conduct two such offensives at the same time. She never has had. In every case where an offensive was in progress it was the signal for a period of quiet on the unaffected front. If Germany did not have the numerical strength to attack both Russia and the western allies at the same time, certainly now she has not enough men to initiate an offensive on the entire western front or at two parts of it so widely separated as are France and Italy. If, therefore, an attack against Italy is staged—and there have been indications that it is preparing—it will be conducted by the Austrians without any great assistance from Germany.

CAVALRY IN THE GREAT BATTLE.

The relative inactivity during the past week affords an opportunity to mention a most interesting fact connected with the great battle which began on March 21. It has been generally assumed that the day of cavalry lapsed with the invention of the machine gun and the airplane. We have heard little if anything of the cavalry arm since the early days of the war, when the movement of troops ceased to be rapid and degenerated, so to speak, into the dogged persistence of the trenches. General French was criticised on more than one occasion because he persisted in keeping intact a large cavalry force safely in rear of his army for which there was no apparent use.

But cavalry has been used in trench warfare, and most brilliantly used. The cavalry pursued the Germans in their retreat in the early part of 1917 and kept closely in touch with them during the whole of their retrograde movement. The cavalry operations in the battle of Cambrai, both in the British attack and in the subsequent German attack, were among the most brilliant exploits of the war. And, in the present great battle, it was the cavalry of the French which maintained connection between the right flank of the British and the French left, and which in large measure prevented the Germans from accomplishing their object of dividing the two forces and rolling up the British line.

In the early days of this attack, it will be remembered, the Germans were pushing southward against the French, who were in retreat between Roye and Montdidier, while the British were retreating westward, north of this line. Here was the danger of the break in the continuity of the line. There was, indeed, a rupture, and for a time the German plan promised success. But the French cavalry stepped into the breach, re-established the connection, and fought both as mounted infantry and as a cavalry until reinforcements of infantry came up and took over the line. This was really the turning point of the battle, as once a definite, positive connection between the two allied armies was made, the danger that the German attack would succeed ceased.

It was largely a question of mobility. And, in many of the battles of this war, just as in many in past wars, the great mobility of a cavalry force has been utilized in stiffening a vital section of a battleline where disaster threatened. Though the development of trench warfare has undoubtedly restricted the usefulness of cavalry, it must still remain an important military arm.

NURSES NOT SUFFICIENT IN NUMBERS FOR WAR REQUIREMENTS

Suggestions That Problem Be Met by Training Many Non-Professional Aids, Enlisted for Period of War Only, From Class That Would Not Take Up Nursing Permanently

By S. S. GOLDWATER, M. D.

Director of Mount Sinai Hospital, Chairman of the War Service Committee of the American Hospital Association, and Chairman of the Committee on Hospitals, General Medical Board, Council of National Defense.

TWO MILLION Americans are under arms. For the first time since war was declared American troops are reported to be engaged in active hostilities in large numbers. Immediate preparation must therefore be made for the medical and nursing care of large numbers of wounded men, as well as of the sick. Medical units, with nursing auxiliaries, have been assembled in France, in anticipation of this need; many of these units have thus far had little work to do, but their days of idleness will soon be over.

The Surgeon General plans to set up not less than 200,000 hospital beds in France; 100,000 beds have already been established or provided for in this country, making a total of 300,000—a number approximately equal to the total number of beds heretofore available in the general hospitals of the United States for the care of the civil population. Meanwhile it is reported that the Government will soon put another 1,000,000 men in the field, bringing our total armed forces up to 3,000,000, and necessitating the establishment of 150,000 additional hospitals beds, at home and abroad. It is the task of the Government to obtain a nursing organization of 50,000 women, to serve over 400,000 sick and wounded. This must be done. How to do it is a question which has not yet been conclusively answered.

During the past year the army and navy, with the help of the American Red Cross and the active support of hospitals, hospital committees, and nursing organizations, have been endeavoring to enroll a number of nurses adequate to the need. The number thus far enrolled is reported to be a little over 9,000, or approximately one-fifth of the total required.

"The army now announces a new drive—an effort is to be made to enroll "not less than 1,000 graduate nurses monthly." This proposal is all very well, but the expectation that the actual enrollment of graduate nurses will reach any such figure is not justified, in the light of the experience of the past year. The truth of the matter is that the country cannot spare the number of graduate nurses that the army requires, nor can the training schools produce new graduates in sufficient numbers to satisfy the needs of both the military and the civil population.

For a year the country has been scoured for graduates, and 9,000 have been enrolled! Many of the nurses who have enrolled with the army and navy have been drawn from institutions; some were public health nurses; the remainder were engaged in private practice. Nine thousand in a year equals 750 per month. Is it likely that the pace can be quickened?

"In spite of the fact that only 9,000 have thus far entered the military establishment," says a recent report on the nursing situation, issued by the Public Health Committee of the New York Academy of Medicine, "a shortage of nurses has already become apparent in the hospitals, particularly in the smaller ones, and in private practice; the American Nurses' Association has looked into the matter of the shortage, and reports that until several months ago most of the registries had available nurses, but since then all of the nurses are busy all the time." In New York recently it took forty-eight hours and the combined efforts of seven registries to produce two graduate nurses for a desperately sick patient; and this is not an isolated case. Letters from all parts of the country tell the same story. The flow of nurses from civil to military hospitals will continue, and should be encouraged; but urge as we may, the stream will diminish and not increase in volume during the months to come—it cannot be otherwise! From this source the needs of the army will not be supplied in full measure.

If graduates are not now available in sufficient numbers, why not produce more? The suggestion is not new. The efforts of the military authorities, of the American Red Cross, of the Nursing Committee of the Council of National Defense, and of co-operating local committees have not been confined to the enrollment of ready-made graduates. A heroic attempt has been made to increase the graduate output, or, at any rate, to prepare to increase the future output, by augmenting the undergraduate enrollment of the country's 1,500 training schools. Those who believed that this effort would meet the necessities of the case did not subject their program to a sufficiently critical analysis.

To catch up with the military program the enrollment of nurses for military service during the coming year will have to be nearer 2,000 than 1,000 per month. Older graduates are not obtainable. What can the schools furnish? The number of pupils now enrolled in the training schools of the country is reported to be approximately 40,000. Of this number considerably more than one-third are probationers and juniors; about one-third are intermediates, and considerably less than one-third are seniors or near-graduates. The schools cannot be expected to turn out more than about 11,000 graduates annually. What will become of these?

Of the year's 11,000 graduates, some will marry and will be lost to the profession; a certain number (more than in pre-war days, when attractive business opportunities for women were fewer than they are today) will take up gainful occupations other than nursing; some will enter the field of public health nursing; a group will remain in hospitals, where they are needed to take the place of graduates now in the military service; a large proportion will engage in private duty nursing; and the remainder will enter the military service. Is it reasonable to suppose that the army will succeed in winning over more than one-third of the total number of newly-made graduates? My estimate is one-third; the average estimate of three experienced training school principals is one-fourth. The principal alumnae associations in New York recently made a concerted and a successful demand for an increase in nurses' wages from $4 to $5 per day. Economic conditions justified the increase, but the increase will hardly stimulate army enrollment.

The insufficiency of the available supply of graduating students is generally conceded, and, as I have already said, efforts to increase this supply have been made. What are some of the measures that have been tried or recommended?

First and foremost is the direct appeal to the young women of the country to enter the ranks of the nursing profession as a patriotic duty. This appeal has been made over and over again during the last year from the platform and through the press, but the results have not been satisfactory. Now, as heretofore, a small proportion of the training schools of the country are receiving applications in excess of their capacity. This fact has led to the suggestion that the training schools increase their capacity by renting additional houses for dormitory purposes—as if the capacity of a school for the thorough training of accomplished bedside nurses could be indefinitely and satisfactorily increased without adding hospital beds! It is true that the hours of hospital duty might be somewhat shortened and the pupils' tasks lightened, but there is a minimum below which it would not be wise to cut down the practical work of the pupil who is being fitted for the serious and responsible task of army nursing.

Is it really worth while, in any broad consideration of the problem, to place so much emphasis on the demand for additional housing facilities, when a majority of the schools in the country are unable to obtain even their normal supply of pupils? Within two months the Superintendent of a prominent training school in New York has been importuned by not less than fifteen training school Superintendents in and about the city to direct to them her rejected applicants! THE NEW YORK TIMES has published some illuminating letters from smaller hospitals that are in desperate need of probationers, with none in sight. The Young Women's Christian Association reports that its "graduate trained attendants are in demand to supplement a shortage" in the hospitals.

In November, 1917, a statement issued by the Committee on Nursing of the General Medical Board of the Council of National Defense credited the training schools of the country with an increased enrollment of 2,600 over the previous year—this, after more than six months of actual war, during which period persistent and intelligent efforts were made under the direction of some of the ablest women in the nursing profession to increase the number of pupils in every part of the country. By all means let these efforts be continued and accentuated; but in estimating the probable results, let us not forget the general condition of the country, and the opportunities that are opening up for women in every direction.

In brief, there is not the remotest prospect that the problem will be solved by a suitable increase in the number of pupil nurses, unless the prevailing standards of admission and of training, laboriously built up through a generation of effort, are deliberately broken down and cast aside. On such terms, pupils in large numbers can be acquired, and on no other. But if the number of pupil nurses were increased during the next twelve months by as much as 50 per cent., or 20,000, this would offer no solution of the problem, unless 20,000 advanced pupils now in the schools could be safely delivered over to the military service. This has been proposed and there may be some way of getting it done, but if there is the censor has seen fit to keep it dark. Most Superintendents, having parted with a large proportion of their Supervisors and graduates, have a very natural inclination to hold their senior pupils. If the seniors can be dropped without injury to nursing standards, then the three-year course is an imposition. I, for one, do not think it is; I believe the third-year pupils are still learning.

Two extremely perilous proposals have thus far been made in this connection. The first is that the established requirements for admission to the training schools be temporarily lowered or suspended. I will not argue against this; I will merely say that I am against it. The second is, that the army add to its payroll a sufficient number of "practical" nurses or attendants. Such women, without full professional qualifications, have a perfectly proper place in the scheme of civil life—a place which, unfortunately, has not yet been plainly marked out for them by law, but which should be, and, I trust, soon will be; but the Government can ill-afford to accept them as nurses, not only because of the bad effect that their acceptance would have on the morale of the medical and nursing departments of the army, but because of the position that their service in the army would give them, the claims that it would enable them to make, after the war. Send 20,000 or 30,000 such women into civil life from the army hospitals after the war and the difficulty of maintaining nursing standards would be immeasurably increased.

It has been suggested that the Medical Department of the army inaugurate training schools of its own. At first glance, the scheme is attractive; on closer analysis it loses much of its charm. If the army school or schools should succeed in enrolling 10,000 pupil nurses per annum, what would be the effect of this enrollment on the existing training schools? It is a question to what extent army schools could attract women who would not otherwise consider entering the nursing profession. The diversion of any considerable proportion of the normal supply of probationers from civil to military hospitals would be disastrous to the civil hospitals and the civil population; besides which, as I shall presently show, the army can secure raw material of a special kind at considerably less expense and without danger to the 1,500 schools now in existence.

How would a huge army training school, with branch schools in all of the cantonments, affect nursing standards during and after the war? An army school could hardly promise training as thorough as that which is given in schools connected with representative general hospitals—the clinical material of the army is too limited. The Faculties of the army training schools would be hastily improvised, and would probably be less efficient than those of the civil hospital training schools which have been developed gradually over a period of years and through many vicissitudes.

There is food for thought, too, in the possibility of the sudden cessation of hostilities: under such circumstances what would be the fate of the army training school pupils? How many of the enrolled thousands would secure admission to non-military schools for the purpose of completing their professional training? What welcome would be accorded them? What allowance would be made for such training as the army might have been able to give them? How many, without more ado, would plunge into private practice? If many adopted the latter course, would not the effect on nursing standards and on the economic status of graduate and registered nurses be deplorable?

There is danger in the suggested army training school, viewed from any angle. If the army schools succeeded in attracting the number of women required to staff the military hospitals of the country during a long war (and it must do this if it is to succeed in any large sense, without diverting probationers from the civil hospitals,) there would be an excessive number of professional nurses in the community immediately after the war; competition would be intensified, and professional standards would be endangered. If the large numbers that are expected to enroll were not an additional supply, but were merely drawn away from the civil hospitals, the civil hospitals and the civil population would suffer immediately. On the other hand, if the number of enrollments were small, the whole project would fail to satisfy the army's pressing needs. These were undoubtedly some of the reasons that led Surgeon General Gorgas to declare, in an official memorandum dated Jan. 24, 1918, that "the plan of organizing training schools in connection with army hospitals is not believed to be practicable."

I come finally to what appears to me to be the safest and best way out—in fact, the only way out—namely, the training of a large number of non-professional, voluntary war nursing aids, enlisted for the period of the war only, and composed of a class which will not take up nursing professionally under any circumstance, but which is willing to give gratuitous hospital service during the emergency.

Such women can be obtained quickly, in large numbers. They can be carefully selected. They can be uniformly trained without expense to the Government; civil hospitals stand ready to furnish the necessary training facilities. War nursing aids should be trained in civil rather than in military hospitals, because not all applicants, however well meaning, will qualify; and by intrusting to competent and practiced Superintendents of established training schools the duty of weeding out the unfit, the Government will save expense and trouble. Here is a patriotic service worth doing!

A standard course of training for nursing aide or nurses' assistants has been devised by a group of the best known and most competent training school Superintendents in the country. The American Red Cross has already given part of this course, consisting of fifteen preliminary lessons, arranged to precede the practical ward work, to more than 10,000 women, who have been registered at a dozen or more training centres in the larger cities. In New York City alone, nearly 500 have finished the practical as well as the theoretical course, and about half of this number are now actually engaged in some form of hospital work. Two thousand other women stand ready to take up this work in New York City as soon as the hospitals are opened to them.

Among the 1,500 training schools in the country there should be no difficulty in finding 300 which are capable of training and which can be trusted to train twelve nursing aids or nurses' assistants per month, or, say, 150 per annum. With the moral support of the army, the hospitals of the country can easily obtain and turn out 25,000 nurses' assistants before the end of the present year, or 50,000 by July, 1919.

The women that I have in mind belong wholly or almost wholly to the leisure class. They are now contributing nothing to the efficiency of the nation or to the success of the war; yet they are strong, healthy, patriotic, and willing. They are the only labor reserves that the country possesses, and they can be brought into the nursing field without lessening the available supply of workers for any essential industry. They want to serve the nation, and they should be permitted to do so. The same class is giving valuable service in England—England would be lost, and we shall be lost, without them. When the war is over, the nursing aids will melt away into private life, strengthened and chastened by their experience, leaving the nursing field in the hands of professional nurses. They should be prepared now, for in no other way can the war nursing problem be solved.

LINCOLN'S "DESPOTISM" AS CRITICS SAW IT IN 1861

Criticism of Mr. Wilson's Vast War Power Recalls Attacks on Civil War President—Blockade, Martial Law, and Seizure of Railroads and Telegraph Lines Were Assailed, But Congress Ratified Them

By CHARLES WARREN, EX-ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Charles Warren, the writer of this article, ceased to be Attorney General Gregory's assistant after showing active interest in Senator Chamberlain's Court-Martial bill, which Mr. Wilson strongly opposed. Senator Chamberlain withdrew the bill after the President had denounced it in a letter to Senator Overman.

FREQUENT criticism is heard today of "arbitrary power" given to or asked by the President. Talk is rife of "one-man power," "dictatorship," "autocratic government," and the like.

Political memories in this country are short. Few recall that similar criticisms, charges, and attacks were made, fifty-five years ago, upon President Lincoln, though they were more violent, and expressed in far more savage and unrestrained language.

Who now recalls that on the floor of Congress Lincoln was termed again and again "tyrant," "usurper," "despot"—as "absolute as the Czar of Russia"? Senator after Senator charged that for much less arbitrary acts Kings of England and France had lost their heads. One of them termed Lincoln "the most weak and imbecile man" he had ever met. Benjamin R. Curtis, a former Justice of the United States Supreme Court, described Lincoln's powers as "a military despotism." (Curtis pamphlet on Executive Power, Oct. 18, 1862.) and Joel Parker, a former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire, wrote, Nov. 1, 1862, that: "The President is not only a monarch, but that he is an absolute, irresponsible, uncontrollable Government; a perfect military despotism."

A foreign observer, Schleiden, wrote to Charles Sumner: "One of the most interesting features of the present state of things is the illimited power exercised by the Government. Mr. Lincoln is, in that respect, the equal, if not the superior, of Louis Napoleon. The difference consists only in the fact that the President rests his authority on the unanimous consent of the people of the loyal States, the Emperor his on the army." (Rhodes's History of the United States, III., p. 442).

WHY CONGRESS YIELDS.

The fact was (and probably always will be in time of war) that while the President then was strong with the Congress, he was stronger still with the people, and that Congress, while balking at the grant of the wide and "arbitrary" powers asked for, knew that the people demanded that Congress should back up the people.

Who now recalls that it was prophesied in the Senate that when Abraham Lincoln should go out of office, "the whole country, except thieves, public plunderers, office holders, and the tools of powers, will rejoice"?

Who now recalls that the National Bank act was attacked because it concentrated "the money power" in the hands of the President?

Who now recalls that President Lincoln was charged with either remaining purposely in ignorance or else disregarding the sentiment of the country? Yet Senator Grimes of Iowa wrote to Secretary Chase, July 29, 1862 (Salter's Life of James W. Grimes):

> I need not tell you that the expressions of confidence in the management of the President, his prudence, sagacity, &c., are in a measure enforced, and proceed from the confessed necessity of supporting him as the only tangible head of the loyal Government, and not from any real confidence in his wisdom. • • • It is folly to disregard the sentiment of the country in such time as this—it is worse; it is wickedness. Either Mr. Lincoln disregards it or else he willfully keeps himself in ignorance of it.

What most extreme pessimist of today could more despair of war conditions than did Grimes in a letter to Senator Fessenden, Nov. 13, 1861?

> The truth is, we are going to destruction as fast as imbecility, corruption, and the wheels of time can carry us. • • • the flood of corruption that is sweeping over the land and perverting the moral sense of the people. The army is in most inextricable confusion, and is every day becoming worse and worse.

POWER NOT PERPETUATED.

The following is a brief summary of Congressional attacks upon President Lincoln in the Thirty-seventh Congress (1861-1863) for the "arbitrary" powers which he asked from Congress and which he did not hesitate to exercise when necessity demanded, even without Congressional legislation. Those who fear loss of American liberties at the present time may note that in a government by the people executive power in time of war does not tend to perpetuate itself on the return of peace, for none of the direful prophecies as to the permanent results of Lincoln's acts upon the framework of our liberties were ever realized.

Four statutes gave rise to special condemnation in the Thirty-seventh Congress.

First, the Railroad and Telegraph act of Jan. 31, 1862, c. 15, (12 Statutes at Large, 334,) by which the President was authorized to take possession of any or all the telegraph lines and railroads, and to place under military control all their officers, agents, and employes, and under which persons attempting to interfere with their use or to injure their property in places where the laws of the United States were opposed or obstructed by insurgents too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, were triable by court-martial. Under this act a military director and superintendent of railroads was appointed Feb. 11, 1862, and 2,800 miles of railroad were operated.

Second, the Confiscation act of July 17, 1862, c. 195, (12 Statutes at Large, 589,) by which penalties were prescribed for treason and giving aid and comfort to any rebellion, and the slaves of persons convicted were freed, and under which property of all persons giving such aid and comfort was to be confiscated.

Third, the Conscription act of March 3, 1863, c. 75, (12 Statutes at Large, 731.)

Fourth, suspension of the Habeas Corpus act of March 3, 1863, c. 81, (12 Statutes at Large, 755,) authorizing the President to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus and requiring discharge under certain conditions of all persons held prisoners by order of the President, Secretary of State, or Secretary of War.

In addition to opposition to these legislative measures, bitter attacks were made upon President Lincoln's censorship of the telegraph, censorship of the press, and military arrests.

CENSORSHIP IN 1861.

As early as April, 1861, the Government assumed conclusive control of telegraph lines leading from Washington, at first through the Treasury Department, later through the War Department, and, finally, through the State Department. By his order of July 8, 1861, the Secretary of War forbade any dispatches relative to the operations of the army not permitted by the Commanding General. By his order of Oct. 22, 1861, the Secretary of State prescribed that all telegraphic dispatches from Washington "which relate to the civil or military operations of the Government," excepting Associated Press dispatches, should be prohibited. (See House Report No. 64, March 20, 1862, 37th Cong., 2d Sess.) By his order of Feb. 25, 1862, the Secretary of War forbade all newspaper editors and publishers to publish any intelligence received by telegraph or otherwise respecting military operations, unless expressly authorized by the War Department or Commanding Generals. The newspapers were also dealt with under the 57th Article of War, which was directed against "holding correspondence with, or giving intelligence to, the enemy, either directly or indirectly."

The acts of President Lincoln which occasioned the most bitter onslaughts were the arrests made under his authority, on orders from the Secretary of State and the Secretary of War, and the refusal of the military guards of prisoners to arrested to recognize writs of habeas corpus. Arrests of this nature were deemed necessary by the President at the outset of the war, and were continued until by Executive Order of Feb. 14, 1862, issued in the name of the Secretary of War, all political or State prisoners then held in military custody were ordered to be released on subscribing to a parole to render no aid or comfort to the enemy, and it was provided that "extraordinary arrests will hereafter be made under the direction of the military authorities alone." On Sept. 24, 1862, (two days after his Emancipation Proclamation,) President Lincoln, without any Congressional authorization, issued a proclamation suspending the writ of habeas corpus in respect to all persons arrested by any military authority, and providing for trial by court-martial of all persons "discouraging volunteer enlistments, resisting militia drafts or guilty of any disloyal practice, affording aid and comfort to rebels against the authority of the United States."

LIMBERING UP THE GUNS.

The attacks upon the President began as soon as the Thirty-seventh Congress convened in extra session on July 4, 1861. Senate Resolution No. 1 was introduced to ratify various acts of the President since the outset of the war—one of these acts being his authorization, April 27, 1861, of the Commanding General to suspend the writ of habeas corpus "at any point on or in the vicinity of any military line" between Philadelphia and Washington.

Senator Kennedy of Maryland, July 10, termed it "an exercise of arbitrary power."

Senator Polk of Missouri said:

> This plea of necessity is the tyrant's plea the world over, and has been in all ages the tyrant's plea for the prostration of civil liberty.

Although the actions of the President in calling out troops and increasing the size of the regular army, and enforcing blockades, were vigorously criticised, Congress finally confirmed them in a short statute—the act of Aug. 6, 1861, C. 63, (12 Statutes at Large, 326,) legalizing and making valid all the acts, proclamations, and orders of the President after March 4, 1861, "respecting the army and navy of the United States, or calling out or relating to the militia or volunteers from the States."

At the second session of the Thirty-seventh Congress a resolution was introduced, Dec. 16, 1861, by Senator Trumbull of Illinois, calling upon the Secretary of State for information as to persons arrested. Senator Trumbull said: "The despot creeps upon the people unawares • • • under the plea of necessity."

Senator Grimes of Iowa said, Jan. 14, 1862: "When, for the first time in six months, I attempted to approach the footstool of the power enthroned at the other end of the avenue, I was told that the President was engaged."

In debates on the Confiscation bill, which became the act of July 17, 1862, Senator Saulsbury of Delaware said:

> Under the pretense of suppressing a causeless rebellion, the executive and legislative departments of this Government are, in my opinion, daily engaged in the grossest violations of the fundamental law. • • • Authors and abettors of my country's ruin.

"IRRESPONSIBLE DESPOT."

Senator Wade of Ohio said:

> I could never justify it to the people if I represent that I had sat silent while I heard it rung in my ears from morning till night that the President of the United States was by some mysterious power invested with despotic authority to trample upon the rights of the people and the rights of Congress, and that there was no barrier betwixt him and utter despotism the moment you declare war. I ask of Senators who preach this miserable, slavish doctrine where they got it.

Senator Wade also spoke of the "slavish doctrine, which is unworthy the American Senate—that the President of the United States, the moment we are involved in a war, is a despotic magistrate and is subject to no control from any quarter. • • • This attempt to magnify the President into an irresponsible despot with power to prescribe rules and regulations by which the estates, real or personal, of men can be forfeited."

Senator Trumbull denounced the "assumption of unlimited power by the President" in appointing military governors.

At the same session Senator Powell of Kentucky introduced a resolution, April 24, 1862, asking for information from the State Department as to arrests of Kentucky citizens, speaking of them as having "languished for months in Northern bastiles."

> "I but simply ask that the tyrant," he said, "that the usurper who thus overthrows the Constitution and laws and violates the personal rights and takes away the liberties of citizens without law, without warrant, shall give us their names."

At the third session of the Thirty-seventh Congress (after President Lincoln had issued his proclamation of Sept. 24, 1862, authorizing arrest by the military, and his emancipation proclamation of Sept. 22, 1862) various bills were introduced providing for release of State prisoners, for indemnification of the President and of persons acting by his orders, and for specific authority to the President in the future to suspend the writ of habeas corpus. These bills gave rise to heated and sometimes savage debate.

At the outset of the session Senator Saulsbury of Delaware introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for information as to the arrest of certain Delaware citizens. Senator Bayard said in debate: "We are living under just as despotic a Government as existed in France in the time of Louis XIV.," and he charged the President with "gross oppression." The President's order to the Secretary of War, he said, was "nothing more than the establishment of a dictatorship in this country."

Senator Trumbull spoke of the "exercise of an arbitrary and unnecessary power."

"CABINET OF A TYRANT."

Senator Powell said that "secrecy might well become the Cabinet of a tyrant, but it ill becomes the Cabinet of a free, Constitutional Government." And he continued:

> The Senator from Maine says all this is done under the war power. • • • His resorts again to that old plea of tyrants, necessity. • • • [The President] has exercised usurped power, and violated the Constitution of the country which he has sworn to support.

Senator Saulsbury in an elaborate speech on habeas corpus on Jan. 8, 1863, said:

> Even the great wisdom of the framers of the Constitution could not foresee that it was possible that a man might be placed in the Presidential Chair in less than eighty years from the adoption of the Constitution who should so play the tyrant as to arrest peaceable citizens in States not refusing submission to the general Government and bastile them during his pleasure" in the remotest part of the Union. Sir, had our fathers known that such acts of intolerable oppression could be practiced in the name of liberty, and would be submitted to by the people, I verily believe they never would have formed the Federal Union.
> This patient and long-suffering people of this country have tamely submitted to this exercise of despotic power.

Later, he said, Jan. 27, 1863:

> Thus has it been with Mr. Lincoln—a weak and imbecile man; the weakest man that I ever knew in a high place; for I have seen him and conversed with him, and I say here, in my place in the Senate of the United States, that I never did see or converse with so weak and imbecile a man as Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States. • • •
> [This bill] proposes to legalize the most despotic exercise of power that was ever practiced in any Government since the institution of human society. Talk not to me about lettres da cachet; talk not to me about the espionage of Napoleon; talk not to me about any of the arbitrary exercises of despotic power in this country • • • they are all buried beneath the wave of oblivion in comparison to what this man of yesterday, this Abraham Lincoln, that neither you nor I ever heard of four years ago, has chosen to exercise. • • • If I wanted to paint a despot, a man perfectly regardless of every Constitutional right of the people, whose sworn servant, not ruler, he is, I would paint the hideous form of Abraham Lincoln. If that be treason—

LINCOLN AS CONJURER.

Senator Davis said that the President was—> trying to conjure up out of a thing so insignificant and evanescent as military necessity, of which I have not been able to find a single word in any book, a power as gigantic and quite as atrocious as the rebellion itself • • • myrmidons of the palace and war offices • • • expenses of all their nefarious service. Under the orders of Mr. Lincoln and his Secretary of War this lawless organization has boldly and contemptuously trampled under foot the writ of habeas corpus and the laws and the Constitution both of States and of the United States.

Senator Bayard said that the Habeas Corpus bill (which became the act of March 3, 1863, C. 81, 12 Stat. 755) was "a sheer, lawless despotism and no more; a despotism uncqualed in the annals of the world, unless you go to the King of Dahomey for an example." • • • Senator Powell re-echoed this, saying: "You propose to clothe the President with a power that will make him as absolute a despot as the Czar of Russia ever was."

Senator Wall of New Jersey said March 2, 1863:

> I look upon this bill as fraught in its consequences with more terrible mischief to the best interests of this country than any of the dangerous projects that have sprung, like Minerva, but without her wisdom, full armed from the busy brain of the Chairman of the Military Committee. • • • This bill clothes the President of the United States, with the aid of the Conscription bill passed on Sunday morning, with the panoply of the vast powers and functions of a dictator. The dictator, who in the hour of a nation's peril came forth from the Roman Senate with absolute will over the life, liberty, and property of the Roman citizen, never had any more power than this bill confers upon the President of the United States.

PLEA FOR IMPEACHMENT.

Senator Powell stated that Lincoln should be impeached, and made the following prophecy that the country would rejoice when his term of office ended:

> Why, Sir, these gentlemen go on as if they were absolute monarchs forever. Is it not true that the power of these men is of very brief duration? In two years and two days more Abraham Lincoln will go out of office; and I have no doubt the whole country except thieves, public plunderers, office holders, and the tools of power will rejoice when the day shall arrive. • • • Why, Sir, for one-tenth of the infractions of the Constitution of the British Empire that Abraham Lincoln and those who are at the head of the departments of this Government have inflicted upon this Constitution of ours, one British King lost his head, and another was sent a wanderer and an exile from his home and his throne.

In the House the most extreme attack upon Lincoln was made by Congressman Voorhees of Indiana Feb. 18, 1863. He spoke of the President's proclamation of Sept. 24, 1862, as to martial law, as—> the unbushing assumption of power which has ceased to respect or fear the Constitution or laws. • • • It throws aside all disguise, tears off its veil, and displays the horrible features of despotism to American citizens. • • • The nineteenth century and the land of much-vaunted freedom have produced a President and Cabinet who, in a species of delirium, have defied, spurned and sought to crush and humiliate the legal decisions of centuries made in behalf of personal liberty and personal independence. • • •

> In defiance of all law, in contempt of the judiciary, in derision of the teachings of history, and in scorn and mockery of the holy principles of personal liberty, the writ of habeas corpus stands suspended. The will of the Executive has for more than a year been the sole law of the land to which the outraged citizen has been permitted to appeal. • • •

On the militia law (S. No. 493) Senator Richardson of Illinois said Feb. 4, 1863:

> No bill has ever been introduced into Congress of such fearful import as the one now under consideration. It confers upon the President of the United States power to make all rules and regulations for the enrollment of the militia. • • • This bill proposes • • • to confer upon the President of the United States more power than belongs to any despot in Europe or anywhere else. • • •

The Conscription bill (which became the Act of March 3, 1863) was also the subject of violent attack because of the arbitrary powers which it placed in the hands of the President.

TO ENSLAVE THE NATION.

Senator Saulsbury said Feb. 28, 1863:

> "I regard this measure as the crowning act which gives to the Executive of this nation the power to enslave the entire body of the citizens of this land. • • • The bleeding, mangled body of the Constitution of your country lies in your pathway. • • • Surrender no other liberty or right which the American citizen has, to the absolute will of any man."

Senator Kennedy of Maryland said: "I regret that I stand in the midst of the ruins of the Republic. • • • As to the bill itself, I look upon it as odious and despotic. It goes further to subjugate the people of a free country than any I have ever read of in history or known in the present day."

Congressman Biddle of Pennsylvania, Feb. 23, 1863, said that the Conscription bill was "part of a series of measures which, to my mind, seem materially to alter the structure of the Government under which we live."

Congressman Cox of Ohio said:

> Never in the history of this or any other Government has such a stupendous power been reposed in one man as the power reposed by this bill in the President of the United States. It makes this Government • • • an irresponsible despotism, worse than that of France, and more tyrannical than that of Russia. You have already given to this Administration the purse; you now throw the sword into the scale, and nothing is left to the people but abject submission or resistance. • • • For my part, Sir, I do not trust the present Chief Magistrate.

This reference to the "purse" and the "sword" recalls the fact that the act establishing the National Banking System (Act of Feb. 25, 1863—12 Statutes at Large, 665) at this same session of Congress, was subjected to frequent attack because of its centralization of power in the Executive.

BANKING AND WAR.

Senator Powell of Kentucky on Feb. 10, 1863, said of the Bank act: "It is a grand scheme of consolidation; one that, in my judgment, will become dangerous to the public liberties."

Senator Collamer of Vermont on Feb. 11, 1863, said that the bill was not a war measure:

> I have observed that almost everything that is asked for • • • is put upon that ground; it is either a military necessity, or a political necessity, or you cannot keep the Union together without it, or something of that kind by which we are appealed to to let our conscience and our discernment go, and obey the dictates pressed upon us. If it has come to this, that it is to be more than intimated that we are not to consult our understandings, not to indulge ourselves in reasoning about a matter, but we are to be told ex cathedra by the organ of the Administration that the Cabinet desires and are in favor of a certain thing as an argument to induce that to cave into, it seems to me that implies a degree of subserviency that can hardly be expected.

Senator Davis said Feb. 11, 1863: "Against such a union of the power of the purse and the sword, I will enter my protest at least. I think it is the most dangerous scheme of policy that was ever introduced into any deliberative assembly."

Congressman Steele of New York in the House Feb. 23, 1863, also attacked the centralizing of power, and said that by the National Bank act "the whole currency of this country is to be placed in the hands of the Executive Department, • • • a mammoth institution with its thousands of tributaries scattered over the whole country, all under the control of the Executive Department."

WHITE HOUSE SENTINELS.

As an example of the extremes to which Senators were willing to go, it may be noted that Senator Richardson of Illinois, Feb. 28, 1863, attacked the employment of sentinels around the White House and War Department, saying:

> These emblems of regal power, placed there to familiarize our people with them, filled me with sorrow and sadness. For the first time in our history these things have occurred. Washington had no sentinel while President. Adams had none. Jefferson none. • • • The ruins of this Republic will be scattered along the highway of nations where lie the ruins of all the republics that have gone before us.

LINCOLN OR JEFF DAVIS?

And Senator Davis said on the same day: "Such have been the infractions of the Constitution and the oppressive abuses and the usurpations of power, both by the President and his party in Congress, that a large majority of the Union people of America are at a loss to determine which threatens the greatest evil, the Administration of Jeff Davis or Abraham Lincoln."

Senator Nesmith of Oregon spoke Feb. 4, 1863, of "the imbecility and inefficiency of the head of this Government."

While sustaining attacks of this nature, President Lincoln was confronted on the other hand with a certain degree of criticism from some of his own supporters who expressed their belief that our President, so far from being a "despot," had not been vigorous enough in his treatment of the war, of the enemy, and of those who were giving aid and comfort to the enemy. To point the moral in this direction, Senator Doolittle of Wisconsin, May 2, 1862, narrated the following striking anecdote of Andrew Jackson:

> I have been told upon authority upon which I rely that during the last days of General Jackson at the Hermitage, as he was slowly sinking under the ravages of consumption—that mysterious disease which, while it wastes the body, leaves, if possible, the mind more clear and more near to inspiration—he had a most remarkable conversation with his family physician and friend. While lying upon his bed one day, and speaking of his past Administration, he inquired: "What act of my Administration, in your opinion, will posterity condemn with the greatest severity?"
> The physician replied that he was unable to answer; it might be the removal of the deposits. "Oh, no," said the General.
> "Then it may be the specie circular."
> "Not at all."
> "What is it, then?"
> "I can tell you," said he, rising in his bed, his eye kindling up, "I can tell you; posterity will condemn me more because I was persuaded not to try and hang John C. Calhoun as a traitor than for any other act of my life."
> As early as the debate on July 11, 1861, Senator Lane of Indiana stated that the Government had shown "great forbearance."

Senator Wilson of Massachusetts, Dec. 16, 1861, thus defended the arrests of persons who were holding "secret conclaves" and "peace meetings" after the Union defeat at Bull Run, "giving aid and comfort" to the enemy:

> In Northern cities and villages newspaper presses were publishing treason, proclaiming treasonable purpose, encouraging the rebellion. The Government thought it was necessary, and it laid its hands on the conductors of these presses. • • •
> The President of the United States, through his chief clerk, the Secretary of State, had those persons arrested; and, Sir, the turning of the doors of Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren upon their hinges silenced the innumerable traitors in the loyal States of the Union. They are silent today, but they are silent through fear. • • •
> There has been quite too much • • • kindness of heart in this war, quite too much charity, and it is time that sterner and more determined action should be had both in the civil and military power of the country.

And in the debate on the House bill (H. R. 382), to discharge State prisoners, Wilson again said, July 16, 1862, that the Government had acted with more humanity than any Government had ever done, "too leniently."

ARRESTS NECESSARY.

Senator Doolittle of Wisconsin said, Dec. 8, 1862, that the Government "has been too lenient toward men who have been notoriously engaged, in sympathy and in act, too, with the traitors against the Government; and the complaint has been, not because suspected persons have been arrested, but because the guilty have not been shot or hung; that the prison door has been opened too easily to many of these men."

Senator Field of New Jersey said the suspension of the writ in Maryland absolutely saved the State to the Union, and that the Government had erred, if at all, on the side of leniency.

Earnest defense of the President's alleged "arbitrary" acts was made on the ground that in time of urgent necessity individual rights must sometimes be sacrificed to preserve the country.

Senator Nesmith of Oregon said: "I am not ignorant of the sacredness of personal liberty; but I think this Government, this Constitution, this Union, are paramount to all other considerations, and I think their preservation is far above the personal liberty of any single individual or any fifty individuals."

Senator Morrill of Vermont said, Dec. 11, 1862: "The President is charged as a violator of the Constitution and the laws—a usurper.

> "It is the right and bounden duty of the President to put his hands upon whoever sympathizes or whoever gives aid or comfort to the rebels."

Senator Fessenden of Maine said Dec. 11, 1862, that it was the duty of the President to sacrifice individual rights to due process and liberty for a time if necessary to preserve the Constitution itself. And that though the President may have exceeded his powers or made mistakes, there has been no case in which he had acted wantonly or to wreak private malice.

"MORAL TREASON."

Senator Dixon of Connecticut, Dec. 16, 1861, in upholding the President's arrests, said that if he, the President, had not pursued this course he would have been guilty of "moral treason." He referred to the arrest of various Connecticut citizens who had been holding "falsely called 'peace meetings,'" and continued:

> It is enough for me to know that the public safety demands extraordinary powers, vested in and exercised by the Executive; and I shall not embarrass his bold and patriotic action by any nicely balanced scruples or subtle distinctions. • • • In my judgment he has erred, if at all, on the side of lenity and indulgence. • • •

Senator Wilson of Massachusetts, Feb. 21, 1863, speaking of men whom he described as "tainted with the leprosy of moral treason," said that "the denunciations of the President as tyrant and usurper • • • raise cheers of triumph around rebel campfires."

Senator Browning of Illinois said Dec. 16, 1862, that war should be made on the enemy and not on the Executive:

> If he (the President) becomes, as he is charged with having become, a usurper, if he becomes a tyrant, if he uses this constitutional power as a mere pretext for oppression, his judgment is not an ultimate one. When the appropriate time comes we can investigate his conduct and punish his derelictions; but this is not the appropriate time. Let us now concentrate our efforts against the rebels; let us fight them; let it not go to the country that we have ceased to make war upon them, and have turned our batteries upon a co-ordinate department of the Government. When we do that we become the aiders and abettors of treason and we give aid and comfort to rebellion everywhere.

The futility and unfairness of criticism upon the President in time of war was most eloquently set forth in a striking and little-known speech by Representative Riddle of Ohio in the House, Feb. 28, 1863, a part of which is as follows:

> How easy it is to abuse, traduce, and denounce! Sir, the Executive is the arm of the people under our Constitution, and with it only can we deal a blow upon the rebellion. • • • Whoever strengthens this arm strengthens the national cause; whoever weakens it strengthens the enemy. For the time being the other branches of the Government might well be in abeyance, that all our energies might go to swell the mighty muscles of that arm. To save all, all must be risked. You cannot separate the Executive from the personale of the President; and whatever detracts from him personally weakens the Executive force, as whatever elevates him gives it added strength. So that whatever shakes the confidence of the people, or any of them, in the capacity or integrity of the President by just so much aids the rebellion, as that which strengthens confidence in him gives vigor to the national cause.

THE NEED OF FAITH.

And Riddle pointed out the necessity of faith by the people in the man, Lincoln, in the following remarkable deprecation:

> He may not have in excess that ecstatic fire that makes poets and prophets and madmen; he may not possess much of what we call heroic blood, that drives men to stake priceless destinies on desperate ventures, and lose them; he may not in an eminent degree possess that indefinable something that schoolboys call genius, that enables its possessor through new and unheard-of combinations to grasp at wonderful results, and that usually ends in failure; or, if he possesses any or all of these qualities, they are shaded and subdued in the presence of a danger that dwarfs giants and teaches prudence to temerity. He is an unimpassioned, cool, shrewd, sagacious, far-seeing man, with a capacity to form his own judgments, and a will to execute them; and he possesses an integrity pure and simple as the white rays of light that play about the throne.

Finally, there may be cited, as intensely pertinent to the impatient mood of this country today, the following remarks of Senator Grimes, Feb. 17, 1863, as to his view of the requisite power and the corresponding responsibility of the President of the United States in time of war:

> I am aware that this bill confers extraordinary powers upon the President. It grants no power, however, that I am not anxious to bestow upon him. I wish to confer upon him ample means to restore the Union and to defend the national honor abroad, and I will hold him and his immediate constitutional advisers responsible for the manner in which that power shall be exercised.

On the same patriotic lines were Senator Sherman's remarks in the Senate on Feb. 5, 1863, when he said:

> "We do no good to our cause, no good to our country, by a constant crimination of the President, by arraigning him here, as I have heard him arraigned as a tyrant and an imbecile. • • • If we allow his authority to be subdued and overrun, we destroy the authority of the Government of the United States."

FINE RECORD OF BRITISH SUBMARINES TOLD IN OFFICIAL REPORT

An official report on the work of British submarines, made public in this country last week by the British Admiralty:

VENTURESOME as the enemy is with his U-boats, he rarely allowa his above water craft beyond the safe confines of his harbors. He well knowa that our submarines are ever on the prowl for them, and how vigilant and thorough is the watch kept may be gathered from the fact that so few opportunities are afforded them. Our submarines have successfully attacked no less than forty enemy warships.

Night and day the search is continued. According as circumstances may dictate, the watch is kept on the surface or submerged save for the periscope, or maybe the vessels are on diving patrol, only coming to the surface every now and again to scan the horizon for any hostile craft which may come within reach.

A ship being sighted, the submarine dives to attack. As the ship is probably steaming fast on a zigzag course, a long time may elapse while the submarine is chasing or manoeuvring to get into a favorable position to fire her torpedoes. While this is going on she must ascertain whether the ship is friend or foe, and at all costs she must avoid being seen. If the periscope is sighted the hostile ship will make off with all speed, and the odds are that she will get away. An irregular course and great speed make her a difficult target, and if the sea is smooth she may see the track of a torpedo fired at her and steer to avoid it.

But in spite of all difficulties the submarines manage to drive home their attacks, and a few of their successes may be recordsd.

While patrolling between the eastern Ems and Weser River a submarine sighted two lots of destroyers' smoke to southeastward. Two anxious hours were spent manoeuvring for position to attack, and then, at a range of 500 yards, two torpedoes were fired, one at the bow and the other at the stern of one of the destroyers. Having fired the torpedoes, the submarine dived to avoid being detected, but a loud explosion told without doubt that one torpedo had reached its mark. Eight minutes later the destroyer was seen sinking by the stern, fifteen feet of her bow still standing vertically out of the water. The other destroyer was seen steaming at varying speeds and distances around the wreck. Elated at the success the submarine thirsted to put her down, too, but as two more destroyers had arrived on the scene and were systematically searching for her it was not considered feasible to continue the attack.

On another occasion two armed auxiliaries were sighted in the Heligoland Bight, and the leader, the larger of the two, was attacked and defeated, and was seen to be sinking by the stern.

It frequently happens that a submarine does not usually see her victim struck, but she invariably has the satisfaction of hearing the explosion if the torpedo gets home. This was the experience of a submarine which, patrolling one morning off the Ems, sighted an enemy destroyer and fired both bow tubes at a range of 350 yards. As the submarine dived on firing, the result was not seen, but after the lapse of a few seconds there was an exceedingly loud explosion, which was distinctly heard twenty-five miles away. A quick sweep around with the periscope two or three minutes later revealed no sign of the destroyer which had been fired at, but 400 yards astern was another vessel of the kind.

As the destroyer was not actually seen to be hit, at first it appeared likely that in reality there was only one enemy vessel, but after the bearings and distances had been carefully worked out this did not seem to have been possible. In view of the violence of the explosion, it is probable that the magazine blew up, and that would account for the rapid disappearance of the ship.

Yet another instance of the total disappearance of the ship may be cited. One of our submarines located an enemy submarine ahead of her and, giving chase, reduced the range to four hundred. Two torpedoes were fired, and one was seen to hit. When the smoke cleared away there was not a vestige of the hostile vessel to be seen.

These are but a few of the many instances which could be quoted showing the silent and stealthy work of the submarines.

For submarine operations to succeed it is necessary to take the enemy by surprise, and for that reason their work is a hidden mystery and their movements wrapped in obscurity. The following extract from an official report of operations in the Heligoland Bight lift for a moment the veil of secrecy and afford a glimpse into life on one of these craft.

> "When a submarine is submerged her captain alone is able to see what is taking place; the success of the enterprise and the safety of the vessel depend on his skill and the nerve and the prompt, precise execution of his orders by the officers and men under his command.
> "Our submarines have been pioneers in waters which have been mined. They have been subjected to skillful and well thought-out anti-submarine tactics by a highly trained and determined enemy, attacked by gunfire and torpedo, driven to lie at the bottom at great depths to preserve battery power, hunted for hours at a time by hostile torpedo craft, and at times forced to dive under our own warships to avoid interfering with their movements.
> "Sudden alterations of course and depth, the swish of propellers overhead, and the concussion of bursting shells give an indication to the crew of the risks to which they have been exposed, and it speaks well for the morale of these young officers and men and their gallant faith in their Captains that they have invariably carried out their duties quietly, keenly, and confidently under conditions that might well have tried the most hardened veterans."

The hardships undergone during stormy weather are terrible. During the Winter months westerly gales were frequently experienced in the Bight, and these gales were invariably accompanied by high steep seas which made it impossible to open the conning tower hatch. Vision was limited to that through the periscope and was only a cable or two between the seas which continually broke over them.

There was no rest at the bottom, even at twenty-two fathoms, as the vessels rolled and bumped dangerously. They were, consequently, compelled to keep under way at a depth clear of the keels of possible ships. When the battery power became low, the submarines had perforce to come to the surface to recharge. While on the surface it was essential to run the engines in order to keep head to sea, and through the ventilator—which with the engines running must necessarily be kept open—much water was shipped.

"The seamen got very little sleep owing to cold."

With these words the Captain of a submarine concludes his report on a cruise in the North Sea. It is characteristic of the service that he should make no reference to the fact that, while the crew had got very little sleep, he had got infinitely less himself. The weather had not been good, and throughout the six days the cold had been intense—arctic in fact. At times ice formed on the periscope very quickly and obscured vision, so that it had to be dipped every five minutes. On the surface the thermometer gave no reading, though it had a minimum of 18 per cent. of frost. To receive messages by wireless was impossible, for the spray froze on the aerial forming a coating of ice two inches thick.

From time to time it was necessary to dive to remove the icicles, which over a foot long depended from portions of the superstructure. The bridge screen froze like a board, and only with difficulty could it be folded. The ice on the coats of the officers and crew did not thaw until some hours after the garments had been hung up below.

Four battleships of the Kaiser class were sighted by a submarine which was patrolling off the Danish coast. Probably there were other vessels in company, but owing to low visibility they were not seen. After getting into position to attack, the submarine broke surface, owing to the heavy swell, and it was necessary to go full speed to get her under again. Just before the periscope dipped sights were got on the third ship in the line, and four torpedoes were fired. The range was estimated at 4,000 yards. Two loud explosions were heard, and the commanding officer of the submarine was of the opinion that the third and fourth ships in the line were each hit by a torpedo.

As the submarine was about to rise to observe the result of the shots, a destroyer was heard to pass very close overhead, and after that she was continually harassed by destroyers. Two depth charges exploded in close proximity to her, and a sweep was distinctly heard to drag over her hull. For two hours the destroyer searched diligently for her, but without success.

Some failures may be described as more glorious than victories, and the attempt of a submarine to pass through the Sound into the Baltic is surely one of these, replete as it is with pluck and persistence.

It was known that the German fleet was exercising in the Baltic, and three submarines, X, Y, and Z, were detailed to make the passage of the Sound and attack. It was essential that the three vessels should pass through the Sound the same night, but, unfortunately, X developed certain defects and was unable to keep up with the other two. The result was that she reached the entrance to the Sound the night after Y and Z had successfully made the passage. Their presence was discovered in the Baltic, and the enemy took all possible steps to prevent either their getting out of the Baltic or others getting in.

What X found was four merchant ships in line abreast proceeding through the narrow entrance to the Sound, and from the accurate station they kept it was evident they were sweeping. Beyond them were destroyers. These ships were all showing navigation lights, and, accordingly, X thought it best to do so, too, hoping to pass without attracting attention.

She had not proceeded far before she was detected by a destroyer, which tried to ram her. Her only course was to dive, and as she sank in the water she heard a thrashing of the enemy's propellers above her. To make the passage with lights burning was clearly out of the question, and, nothing daunted, she returned silently and stealthily, creeping on the surface until she got into the wake of a vessel proceeding through the Sound, trusting to be able to follow her unobserved.

For a while it seemed as if the plan would succeed, but suddenly the vessel she was following stopped. As luck would have it, she was a destroyer, which at once endeavored to ram her. Again she dived. A third and fourth attempt brought no greater success. The enemy, thoroughly alarmed, were ever on the alert to ram her.

Another effort would not only have been hopeless, but would have unjustifiably risked the boat and the lives of the crew, so she returned to her base, as her gallant commander expressed it in his report, "prior to making a further attempt."

The enemy, however, is up to many tricks, and decoy ships have been known to give a submarine a sharp surprise. On one occasion the submarine sighted what appeared to be a merchant ship and gave chase, showing the signal "Stop engines" and "Send a boat." When the submarine had closed to about a mile the steamer hoisted a German naval ensign and opened fire with a six-inch gun, at the same time increasing speed and altering course so as to ram the submarine. At the time the submarine gun was manned the signals were still flying, and there were altogether about twelve men on her deck, but she just managed to dive in time. Two or three minutes later two loud explosions were heard overhead. Beyond shaking the boat violently they did no damage.

From time to time instances of encounters occur between our submarines and those of the enemy, which prove inclusive. After many hours of dead reckoning a submarine cannot be sure of her position, and in one such encounter the British thought for some time that her adversary, which was approximately end-on, was her consort out of station. Realizing her mistake she dived at once, but before she could pick up the German in her periscope the latter had also dived. Under the circumstances "stalemate" was practically inevitable, and after an hour and a half, during which they simultaneously broke and simultaneously dived again, each manoeuvring for a favorable position for attack, the German retired out of the area.

MOTOR HEADLIGHTS MUST BE TESTED

New Law Makes for Safety by Prohibiting Excessive Glare—Uniform Standard of Illumination

A definite and uniform system in automobile headlight illumination is assured for New York motorists as well as every user of the highway at night as a result of Governor Whitman's signature last week of the Motor Vehicle Headlight bill. This, and the bill limiting the weight of motor trucks with loads to a maximum of 25,000 pounds, (12½ tons,) also signed by the Governor, were the only really important automobile bills passed at the last session of the Legislature.

The Headlight bill provides many benefits, the necessity of which have long been recognized by lighting experts and those who are working for the greatest possible safety to all users of the highway. It means the extinction of dazzling headlights, blinding instead of illuminative and conducive to accidents. It also means that every headlight device used in New York State must submit to an impartial and scientific test to determine its proper lighting qualification. In addition it provides for proper adjustments and be strong enough to reveal the license plate number at a distance of at least fifty feet.

Secretary of State Hugo while in New York last week received several applications from headlight manufacturers for official tests at an early date. The law provides that any person or concern may submit to the Secretary of State a device for controlling the front lights of motor vehicles, and this shall be tested by the United States Bureau of Standards or any other qualified testing laboratory not interested in lamps or headlighting apparatus, or by disinterested qualified technical experts from the physical laboratory of a university or technical school in this State. The fee will be $50. The Secretary of State is also given the power to test out the device on the road as he may see fit.

If the device meets the illuminating requirements provided for in the bill a certificate to that effect will be given by the Secretary of State. The ultimate result will be that in the near future every purchaser of motor lights will be able to select a proper device, knowing that it has been accurately tested.

Trucks of two-ton capacity or over so controlled as not to exceed fifteen miles an hour need only be fitted with a light capable of picking up a substantial object seventy-five feet ahead. Any good oil lamp will meet these requirements.

GOOD DESIGN ON STRAIGHT LINES.

New model of the Case six-cylinder touring car for five or seven passengers. Wheelbase 125 inches; finished in dark blue.

ether details tending for uniformity in the amount of light to be seen within certain distances.

The two lamps in front, not exceeding twenty-four candle power, must be so adjusted as to avoid dangerous glare or dazzle, and so that no dazzling light projected to the left of the axis of the vehicle when measured 75 feet or more ahead of the lamps shall rise above 42 inches on the level surface on which the vehicle stands. There must also be sufficient side light to reveal any object 10 feet on both sides of a car at a point 10 feet ahead of the lamps. All this, however, which has been a puzzle to ninety-nine out of every one hundred motorists, will be taken care of in the tests.

Front lights must be visible at least 250 feet in the direction in which the car is going. When on a highway not well enough lighted to reveal any object straight ahead 200 feet away, such front lights shall be of sufficient intensity to reveal that object at least 200 feet away. This, however, is not to apply to motor trucks.

The lighted lamp in the rear must

Rubber Production Fields.

For years the forests of Brazil furnished the greater part of the world's crude rubber. Owing to waste and destructive tapping of the wild Hevea rubber trees of the Upper Amazon River, coupled with the lack of adequate labor, rubber users sought other fields. Extensive experimentation in the East Indies demonstrated that the Hevea, which is the most important of the rubber-bearing trees, could be grown successfully there. The world's production of plantation-grown rubber is now seven times as great as that of wild rubber. The world's total output of crude rubber for this year will reach about 250,000 tons. One rubber company has a plantation in Sumatra covering 20,000 acres.

NATIONAL ROAD POLICY.

Government Aid Requested for Efficient Highway Transportation.

In view of the increased importance of good roads for the necessary transportation facilities of the country, a widespread demand is making itself felt for the creation of a centralized governmental highway department in Washington to formulate a definite and permanent highway policy and with authority to direct the administration of that policy.

Never before since the advent of the automobile has the motor car been recognized as such an essential aid, both in the war program of the country and in a great variety of commercial interests, as is the case today. Motor vehicles are doing a large part of the hauling formerly restricted to railroads, and good roads are as necessary to the efficiency of motor transportation as steel rails are to a well managed railroad.

Under State control of highways there is lack of attention to the main interstate arteries of travel so essential to movement of army trucks, to operation of intercity motor express and freight lines which help to relieve railroad freight congestion, and to Post Office and private rural parcel post and express service, which is becoming a vital factor in helping to solve the food situation.

Need for the co-ordination of highway requirements and the adoption of a national policy is shown from the fact that nine different Federal departments and commissions have a direct interest in transportation by highway. They are the Departments of War, Commerce, Agriculture, Post Office, Labor, and Treasury, the Director of Railroads, and the Fuel and Food Administrations.

The American Association of State Highway Officials, on April 22, indorsed the resolution for a governmental highway policy passed by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual convention in Chicago earlier in the month, and added the statement that "we believe the resolutions are important and necessary, and should be made operative at the earliest possible moment."

Resolutions of the same tenor were adopted recently at the sixth annual convention of the United States Good Roads Association at Little Rock, Ark., and by the Highway Traffic Association of the State of New York.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce is in full sympathy with the movement for the adoption of a Federal highway plan.

Motor Car Demand in Brazil.

Consul Samuel T. Lee of Rio Grande, Brazil, reports that the motor truck demand there is chiefly for vehicles of four to five tons' capacity; chain drive on rear wheels; three speeds; Zenith carburctors; Bosch magnetos; two head, two side, and one rear light, and usual tread used in the United States. There are facilities for building truck bodies locally.

In passenger cars the torpedo type of body is preferred, the most popular colors being dark blue and black, with nickel-plated or yellow trimmings. There seems to be no marked preference regarding style of top or sort of upholstery finish, but cars seating seven passengers with chauffeur are most in demand and a thirty-centimeter (about twelve inches) clearance from the ground is desired.

GOOD TIRES GIVE EASE IN MOTORING

Selection Should Be Based on Comfort and Cost Per Mile—Points on Choosing Different Types

By H. CLIFFORD BROKAW,
Principal West Side Y. M. C. A. Automobile School.

Do your tires make you tired? Not only as to the expense of renewals, but as to comfort in riding? Tires probably are less understood than anything else about the car. There are many things to consider in buying a tire. A popular type at present is one of the so-called non-skid tires. There are many patterns, and they are very good where the driving is confined to hard city pavement. They are not good in mud or loose snow. It is necessary, then, to put on non-skid chains, and the bumps or indentations of the non-skid tire make very good points for the cross links to catch fast. The chain does not creep, but the cross link cuts its way into the tread of the tire and gradually destroys it.

If the tire is to be used outside of the city it is much better to buy a plain tread tire and use chains whenever there is danger of skidding.

Often seconds of a reliable make can be bought at a reduced figure and give very good service, but the general run of seconds will be found poor. Often they are discarded tires which are recovered with rubber and a single lining of fabric put on the inside. This gives a very good appearance, but the fabric carcass is practically worn out and the tire may blow out inside of 100 miles. On the other hand, I have bought other seconds, of known reliable make, and got more than the guaranteed mileage for the perfect tire.

Of course, the main things to consider in buying a tire are, first, comfort, and, second, cost per mile. The average driver does not care to keep a set of books on his tire performances, and he does care a lot about his comfort in riding. Some manufacturers recommend a very high pressure in their tires and will not make good, in case a tire goes wrong, if there are indications that this pressure has not been maintained. This pressure is often so high that the tire loses its chief function, that of absorbing the small road shocks, and riding is anything but comfortable. Other manufacturers do not require so high a pressure, and consequently riding is much more enjoyable.

The "cord" tire is an example of comfort through low pressure, with very little, if any, additional cost per mile. As a matter of fact, in buying a tire the original cost should not be so much considered as the cost per mile. Sometimes it is worth while paying a little more for a tire which gives a higher mileage. Thus, if a $25 tire is good for 5,000 miles, very often a $30 tire will give 7,000 or 8,000 miles.

The size of the tire to be used on each particular car has been determined by the manufacturer, and it is usually well to replace an old tire with a new one of the same size. But this is not an inviolable rule. A tire may be either too large or too small for economy. If the prescribed size is used and the mileage does not come up to what it should, it may be possible that the car is being overloaded and a larger size of tire is needed. Sometimes the reverse is true when a heavy body is removed and a light one put on. In such a case a smaller tire would cost less and probably give the same mileage, effecting a saving on cost per mile.

Salesmen sometimes recommend a tire which has one more layer of fabric than others of the same size. It may or may not be of value. It may be made of poor material and not have the strength of another tire with less fabric. Again, a tire with multiple layers of fabric may be so stiff and lacking in resiliency that it makes riding hard; but it must have layers enough to give the necessary strength.

Regarding beads: With the new type rims the straight side tire has become more popular and it is very satisfactory for general use. The clincher tire, when it rusts fast to the rim, is much more difficult to get loose than the straight side, which has this additional point in its favor. In buying the straight side tire be sure to get the liner which goes next to the rim and is usually fastened to the tire.

PLEASANT SCENIC TOUR.

Seventy-five-Mile Run Amid Country Beauties in Westchester.

Westchester, Putnam, and Dutchess Counties offer numerous short automobile trips out of New York over good roads and charming scenery. At this time of year, when the fruit trees are in blossom, it is one continuous panorama of beautiful views. A short tour has been outlined by the Bureau of Tours of the Automobile Club of America which runs through the watershed district skirting the shores of a number of beautiful lakes for a distance of about seventy-five miles over the following itinerary:

Starting from Fifty-ninth Street, or the vicinity, the run can be made through Central Park, then up Seventh Avenue to 145th Street, crossing the Harlem River to East 149th Street, and turning north in Mott Avenue to the Grand Concourse. A right turn at the end of the Concourse leads to Van Cortlandt Avenue, where a left turn is made into Bainbridge Avenue, which in its turn bears right into Jerome Avenue. Passing Woodlawn Cemetery on the right, the route turns right in 233d Street and crosses the railroad, turning left shortly afterward into Carpenter Avenue, which is followed as far as South Street. Here a right turn leads to the White Plains Road and a left turn along the main road to First Street, where the route crosses the railroad into Lincoln Avenue and enters Lincoln Circle, Mount Vernon.

The exit from Mount Vernon is made by Gramatan Avenue from Bronxville, eighteen miles from New York City. A left turn in Pondfield Street and a right turn, in Midland Avenue lead through the town to Waverly Place, and the New York Post Road is followed north via Scarsdale to White Plains, eight miles beyond.

The main Danbury Road is then followed as far as Bedford via the Kensico Reservoir and Armonk, over fine surface. At Bedford a left turn is made to the new main highway, whose bituminous bound macadam is in excellent condition. Continuing about two miles east of Katonah the route passes the dam of the Cross River Reservoir for Golden's Bridge and continues through extremely attractive scenery on a recently finished road to Purdys, where a left turn is made crossing the railroad at the station and continuing through Somers, turning left and crossing the railroad at Lincolndale. Just beyond the agricultural school a right turn is made into the road that skirts the upper end of Amawalk Reservoir. Then turn south, following the shore passing Amawalk Station to Yorktown Heights, where a left turn is made following a good road to the end, turning left skirting the shore of Croton Lake, crossing Pine Bridge and following a good macadam road to Briarcliff. From there on the Saw Mill Road is followed through East View and Elmsford to Dobbs Ferry, returning to New York via Broadway through Hastings and Yonkers.

MOTOR TRUCK CONTROL.

Commerce Commission May Soon Regulate Transportation Lines.

Casslus I. Glasgow, Chairman of the Railroad Commission of Michigan, has taken a decided stand in the control of truck lines as common carriers. He would force these lines to give bills of lading to shippers, and to supply reports to the Railroad Commission and to be responsible to the shipper.

The Attorney General holds that this opinion is correct, and has said that the truck companies must go through the same process as the railroads and be under the control of the State Railroad Commission.

The time is coming, it is predicted by leaders in the motor truck industry, when it will be possible to ship freight by motor truck from every city in America to every other city, and at an expense very little above the express charges as they exist today.

Maine Roads Good for Motoring.

Maine roads are from three to four weeks ahead of normal seasons, in respect to good touring conditions, according to a bulletin issued by the Maine Automobile Association. The main highway between Boston and Portland is in excellent condition. The State highways along the coast to Rockland and Bangor, as well as through Central Maine to Lewiston, Augusta, and Waterville, are also in good shape, as well as the local roads to the Sebago Lake regions.

An interesting booklet giving the history of the Heath carburetor has been issued by the Heath Carburetor Corporation of Detroit.

The hot-spot manifold is an important feature of Aero-Eight motor design. The hot exhaust gas emanating from the cylinders after they have "fired" is conducted to a chamber about the intake pipe through which the gasoline flows on its way to the intake pipe to thoroughly vaporize the gasoline and assure immediate, carbonless carburetion. The lowest test gasoline may be used with efficiency.

Five of the trucks will be used by the Minnesota motor mechanics in training for Government work at the university, and the balance will be used for training purposes before going to France.

In advocating proper brake inspection, C. T. Silver, distributer of Kissel Kars in the local territory, says: "I have often wondered why the necessity of having good brakes was not incorporated in the motor laws long ago, because if there is one part of a car that should be in the best condition, and of the proper size, it is that of the brakes."

President Methuish of the Fulton Motor Truck Company believes that 80 per cent. of the truck demand in the country is for one and two ton vehicles.

F. H. Renges, sales manager of the Moon Motor Car Company, cites an important fact when he calls the present ditch system of drainage on the sides of the highway death traps. Underground drain pipes should be substituted, he points out, in the interest of safety.

The Hupp Motor Car Corporation announces the appointment of Frederick Dickson as assistant sales manager to succeed Harry E. Westerdale, who is going with the McCord Manufacturing Company of Detroit.

The Power Truck and Tractor Company has been incorporated in Detroit with a capitalization of $2,500,000. A factory has been purchased at Detroit and plans made to build 2,000 trucks and 3,000 tractors this year. The models will be 1, 2, 3½, and 5 tons.

The Mississippi River & Bonne Terre Railroad has been using a 1910 Kissel Kar as a switch engine in moving freight and express cars about its yards since Aug. 9, 1915. The regular automobile wheels were removed and flanged wheels put on the rear, and a double truck of four wheels flanged put under the front of the car. There is even a cowcatcher in front of the radiator.

Note the high radiator, the short backward-tilted windshield and the ease-giving roominess of both front and rear seats.

Its graceful symmetry reflects the latest designs in motor car construction. There is continued satisfaction in its silent, sweet-running Continental engine that gives assurance of great reserve power.

Every detail of equipment and appointment is chosen on the basis of quality. It is consistent with fourteen years of Moon history that no car is put out which does not conform in every particular with the best and latest proven ideas in automobile design and construction. Because of extra long, scientifically designed springs, patented seats and cushions and perfect chassis balance, it is a particularly easy riding car, and a revelation in the hands of the woman motorist.

In buying this Moon Six-66 you obtain a car whose intrinsic value is so satisfying you wonder such an unusual car can be built at such a moderate price.

RED CROSS ORGANIZED FOR NEW $100,000,000 DRIVE

ON the accompanying chart is shown the general organization which will handle Greater New York's participation in the Red Cross drive for $100,000,000, the Second Red Cross War Fund. The drive begins a week from tomorrow.

The Committee of One Hundred which is to raise the city's allotment of $25,000,000 is headed by William C. Breed. He has had wide experience in work of this kind in connection with the New York Merchants' Association. In London, in August, 1914, he organized the Relief Committee which enabled hundreds of stranded and panic-stricken Americans to weather the first storm of war excitement and get home in safety.

In general, the plan of organization follows the five boroughs of Greater New York, with the addition of the Van Cortlandt section of the Bronx as a separate division. For each of these six sections of the city there is a complete organization. Special committees are those on Printed Matter and Supplies, Church Services, Parades, Public Meetings and Speakers, Selected List of Names, Publicity, Teams Campaign, Corporations Campaign, House-to-House Campaign, Industrial Campaign, Profit-Sharing Days, Entertainments and Benefits, and others.

With Mr. Breed on the Central Committee are eight Vice Chairmen. Three of them, Morgan J. O'Brien, Felix M. Warburg, and Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., represent Manhattan. Darwin R. James, Jr., represents Brooklyn and is also Chairman of the Brooklyn Committee. Olin J. Stephens represents the Bronx and heads the Bronx Committee. The Van Cortlandt section of the city is represented on the Central Committee by Darwin P. Kingsley, who is also Chairman of the Van Cortlandt Committee. C. G. Thomas and Norman S. Walker represent on the Central Committee, as Vice Chairmen, Queens and Richmond, respectively, and are Chairmen of the committees of their own boroughs.

In the first campaign, last June, for a Red Cross War Fund of $100,000,000, New York City raised approximately $25,000,000.

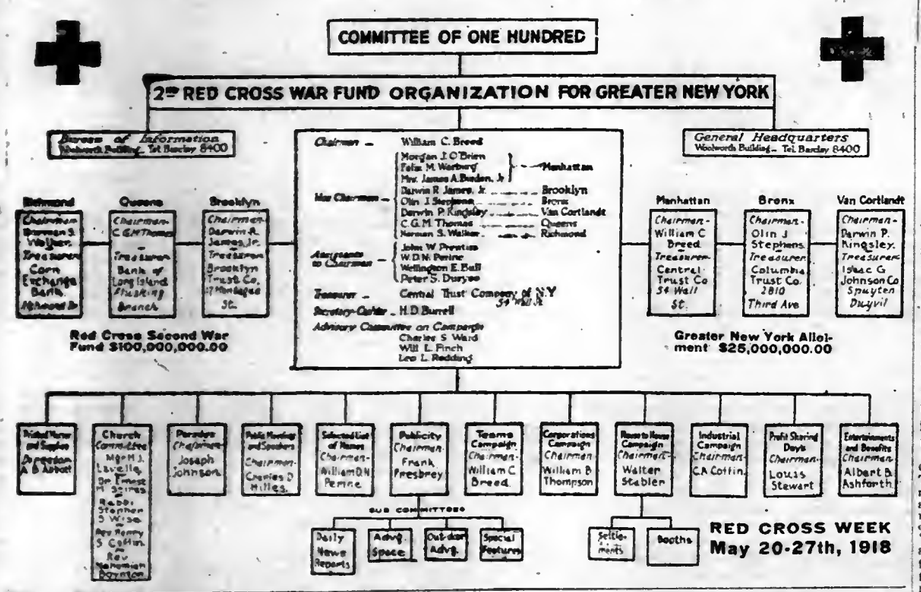
In addition to the thousand and one appeals to sources usually solicited for funds, the managers of the new drive have added an additional "prospect" to their list—a "prospect" that is expected to play a great part in the campaign. The new source of funds is the corporations. Appeals will be made to corporation Directors to vote certain sums to the Second War Fund of the Red Cross.

William Boyce Thompson is Chairman of the corporation division, and he has organized sub-committees along general lines of industry, and has had the assistance of many business men, including George F. Baker, Jr., Walter Jennings, C. C. Dula, E. A. S. Clarke, Charles Hayden, Joseph P. Grace, and Major Michael Friedsam.

"I feel that there are only two points needed to be touched upon with corporations to insure their subscribing," said Mr. Thompson yesterday. "The first question is whether a corporation has the legal right to do so, for the Directors take a personal responsibility. On this point I recently heard two eminent lawyers express opinions. One of them holds that a corporation has the inherent right to use its corporate funds for the maintenance and protection of its affairs, and that the winning of the war is certainly essential for such protection.

"The laws recently enacted in the States of New York and New Jersey are an indorsement and encouragement to the Directors to do something which in itself is permissible for the good of the corporation. If there should be isolated cases of a Director being doubtful, we can quote the remark of ex-Justice Morgan J. O'Brien, who said: 'There would be just as much chance of a stockholder of a corporation getting a judgment against a Director for voting a Red Cross contribution as there would be of convicting an American soldier of murder because he shot a German spy.'

"The second point which must be explained to the corporations is that it is for their economic good to support such work as the Red Cross is doing for our soldiers abroad. It is to the interest of the corporation that the men who have left its employ to enlist should have every possible care and advantage while in the service, in order that after the war they may return as well if not better equipped for work. Helping the Red Cross is an investment in the future efficiency of a corporation."



INTERIOR DECORATORS PLAN AMBULANCE FAIR

AN exhibition that will interest the modern homemaker, as well as the collector of choice furniture, fabrics, and objets d'art, will be the Decorators' Ambulance Fair, to be held by the interior decorators of New York City, May 20 to 27, at 5 East Forty-eighth Street. About four hundred interior decorators and dealers in antiques have made contributions from their own collections. All contributions are donated outright, and the entire proceeds will be devoted to the purchase of ambulances and trailers, through the American Red Cross. "Every penny for ambulances" is the slogan of the workers.

For the most part, the exhibition will consist of typical rooms in many periods. There will be a stately Italian drawing room, filled with appropriate pieces from a number of collections. A Victorian room will contain pieces representative of that era. One decorator is doing a "muslin room" appropriate for a child, and another is arranging a porch breakfast room. Perhaps the most novel feature will be the Chinese "powdering room," arranged by a decorator whose collection of Chinese furniture and ceramics is well known. One whole floor will be given over to a model apartment that can be furnished for $1,000, intended especially for the war bride who wishes to settle in an inexpensive nest until her soldier husband returns from the war.

The show window on the first floor of the building will be arranged as an Italian breakfast room, with garlands of real fruit and flowers, while the service yard at the rear is being turned into a charming Italian garden, set with marbles, decorative ironwork, and garden accessories.

Another interesting exhibit will be the model rest and recreation room for convalescent soldiers. A number of interior decorators are furnishing these rooms in connection with hospitals for our men who return wounded. Cheerful colors are selected.

In addition to the separate rooms and cubicles, a large space will be filled with miscellaneous articles which do not fit into any particular period.

This is the united patriotic contribution of the interior decorators to the Red Cross drive. It is a "Decorators' Fair"—no individual names are mentioned.

"We wanted to be entirely free from the suspicion of personal advertising," said the (nameless) woman who heads the committee of women in charge. "There will be no names tacked to gifts or to their arrangement. The men have joined with us, and practically every decorator in New York has a share in the offering, which is given outright. No one receives a cent; in fact, we share the expense, and the use of the building is donated."

The New Studebaker Cars

Beautiful in Design
Thoroughly Modern Mechanically Right

THE three new Studebaker cars have attracted unusual interest and comment because they are really new models in a year when new models are very rare.

They are new models in appearance, design and mechanical construction.

They are distinctive in appearance—modish, and in conservatively good taste, without being faddish or freakish. Each of the three new cars differs from the other in appearance—each has its own distinctive beauty.

In mechanical construction they embody many new features—every feature has been proved unquestionably superior, not only by use in some of the highest priced cars on the market, but in Studebaker cars in the wonderful Studebaker endurance run on the Chicago Speedway where a car of each model covered a distance of 30,000 miles at an average speed of 45 miles an hour.

The new Studebaker cars are moderately light weight, with great strength and high factors of safety. They are unusually high powered with remarkable gasoline economy.

The mechanical excellence of each car insures low maintenance and up-keep expenses. Their superiority in these features has been proved under tests equivalent to every condition of service.

Any one of the three new Studebaker cars is a high-grade, distinctively handsome, economical car to own and drive. Each model is in keeping with the spirit of the times—economical, efficient, dependable—and priced at a very reasonable price in consideration of the quality and value.

We invite you to see these new cars today.

PRINCETON TO EMULATE WEST POINT

New Jersey College to be Made Into What Is Practically a Military Academy "for the Duration of the War."

By JESSE LYNCH WILLIAMS.

THERE is an interesting "inside story" in connection with the recent decision to turn Princeton University into a military college "for the duration of the war."

This action, taken in co-operation with the Army and Navy Departments after long deliberation and the selection of a thorough working plan, was publicly announced at the last meeting of the Board of Trustees of the university. It means in effect that, beginning next Fall, all students of 18 years or more, unless specifically excused at the end of the first year by request of their parents to the President of the university, will be enlisted in the service of the United States Army or Navy, will be in uniform, and under military discipline as such, but will simply be "detailed, inactive, for study and instruction" at Princeton. They will be subject to call by the President of the United States for active service before the age of 21, "but only in case of great national need."

This does not mean that they will be compelled to take these new courses as if at West Point or Annapolis. Those excused at the end of their first year can go on with the old-fashioned four-year academic courses, freshman year courses being the same in any case, but it means that practically all who are fit will, as a matter of fact, take up military and naval courses—and that is where the inside story comes out.

The plain, unpublished truth is that the Trustees of Princeton have been in a serious quandary during the last year or two to know how to keep their plant going as an institution of learning. So many of the students had left or were leaving to get into one branch of the service or another that it began to look as if the authorities would have a great many well-equipped but empty college halls on their hands, like those at Oxford and Cambridge soon after England's entering the war.

It is a wholesome indication of the patriotic spirit of the youth of the land that a similar state of affairs is threatening all of our institutions of learning in America. Dr. Thwing, President of Western Reserve University, has prepared elaborate statistics on the subject. He points out that this condition, namely, the desertion of students from the quiet life of thought to the strenuous life of fighting, is merely a little more acute at Princeton than at any of the other colleges as yet. This year no less than 32 per cent. of those left on the Princeton enrollment have "deserted." And so little college work is being done by the restless remainder that the Trustees saw that some radical measures would have to be adopted.

You see, at Princeton as at other of our colleges, there is a Reserve Officers' Training Camp, there is an aviation school, and there are also training classes for Y. M. C. A. workers. The presence of all these in khaki and the sound of bugles and drums, together with the inspiring sight of drilling and marching—in short, the general military atmosphere of the place—only made those who were not in khaki the more self-conscious of their civilian garb, the more tired of explaining that they were under age or were going to enlist later. They were amply justified in the eyes of their elders, who have repeatedly quoted to them the counsel of the authorities of the Government "to equip themselves to be men of technical training and educated ability for the nation's service" later. But it is difficult to persuade young men of the fighting age that it is worth while to study the history of those little wars waged by the Greeks and Romans many centuries ago while the greatest war for the greatest cause in all history is going on in their own day and generation. In short, like all the spirited youth of the land, they have become so crazy to get into the game that they can do nothing else.

"And so," as one of the Trustees remarked to me with a smile when I complimented him upon his share in this patriotic move, "we are not the ones who deserve the credit for the 'patriotic move.' This most radical step in the history of the college is prompted by the patriotism of the boys themselves. What choice had we?"

The Trustees, however, deserve some credit for being leaders in a policy which we now learn from Secretary Baker is to be followed by practically all the colleges and universities in the country. For this will supply a need that our country is beginning already to feel—the need for scientifically trained army and navy officers, such as West Point and Annapolis turn out, but cannot turn out in sufficient numbers.

In addition to the French, Canadian, and American officers already there, the Government will supply other experts for instruction in tactics, &c. For the rest of the work the university Faculty is already well equipped for giving thorough instruction in the new army and navy courses in languages, sciences, international law, and so on, which have already been submitted to and approved by the Training and Instruction Branch of the General Staff of the United States Army and by the proper navy authorities.

These new courses are to be taken in three years' intensive work, thanks to two Summer sessions of nine weeks each devoted to rigorous field work instead of the old-fashioned long vacation "loaf." During these three years they will not be subject to the draft even when within the draft age. Their status will be precisely that of cadets at West Point and Annapolis. At the end of that time, by passing examinations and meeting other requirements, they may become lieutenants in the army or ensigns in the navy. Meanwhile they will have been qualified for and will have received the usual academic degree of A. B., B. S. or Litt. B.

As at West Point and Annapolis, they will wear a distinctive uniform of their own, or perhaps a modification of the regular uniform with some distinguishing insignia, and they will be under strict military discipline. There will be no more sleeping late and rushing into the lecture hall, breakfastless and half-dressed, as in the old days when we were in college. Reveille at 6:20, march to breakfast by platoon, as the aviators do down there now—that sort of thing. There are to be no more absences, and no excuses (rendered afterward) for sickness. If sick, the student will report as sick and be sent to the doctor, who will order him to the hospital list or back to duty as fits the case.

The Summer session will go into effect this year for the benefit of students now in college. So by taking two Summer sessions the present freshmen may finish in two more years and be ready for active service.

This revolutionary change in the course of study and the status of the student will prove of benefit not only to the country but to the college, whether the war lasts long or not. For it keeps alive and functioning patriotically a well-equipped plant which otherwise might soon have been obliged to close its doors except as a training camp or hospital. It will also have the advantage of keeping a great many impatient young men, many of them of potential officer stock, in college and patriotically occupied until such a time as they are matured enough and technically trained enough to serve their country in a more useful capacity than if they simply ran away and enlisted in the ranks as otherwise they would be sure to do.

Moreover, if the war does not last, these students will not have lost anything except a little Greek and Latin. It is quite possible that they may be able to worry through life, even a life of peace, without such adornments. It has been known to happen. Latin and Greek will no longer be required for entrance at Princeton. That in itself is a great revolution. Princeton was the last institution of learning in America to hold out against the onslaught on the classics. Some of the educational conservatives down there fondly believe that this letting down of the bars is also only "for the duration of the war." I fear that they are doomed to disappointment. I prophesy that, among the many changes the war is bringing to pass, this change will be permanent. I have friends on the Faculty to whom this will be a bitter blow, but I know that even they will admit that it is better to have a live college than a dead language, and that there is another thing more important now than either.

Either the war will last for several years longer or it will end soon. If it lasts, then Princeton will be preparing officers for the war. If it does not last, then Princeton will still have been preparing educated citizens for peace. In either case this adapting of itself to the needs of the hour will be a good thing for the boys and for the country. After all, it is very much like what is happening to every form of industry throughout the land, from manufacturing steel to earning academic degrees. Everything is being changed or modified to meet the needs of the war.

At first blush, it would seem odd that Princeton in its rural seclusion, the university which prides itself upon being far removed from the noise of the world in a retired spot dedicated to pure learning, the least utilitarian of all our centres of culture, should be first to turn itself into a direct agent for war, the most heartlessly utilitarian of all industries. And yet it is not so very strange. Princeton men will tell you (in fact, graduates of other colleges will testify that they sometimes go out of their way to tell you) that Princeton has played a prominent part in all our wars since and including our first one. A decisive battle of the Revolution was fought around the halls of Old Nassau, in which Washington held the first Continental Congress; and in the present war we find the Commander in Chief of the army and navy, the President of the United States, a Princeton man.

A German Ambassador's Revelations As to Germany's Responsibility of the War

Read Prince Lichnowsky's Memoranda

THIS amazing document, written by the man who was Germany's Ambassador to England from 1912 to 1914, charges that the German Militarists deliberately rejected every offer of reconciliation and insisted upon war. It asserts with astonishing frankness that German intrigue and perfidy forced the Allies to take up arms in defense of honor and life.

In some mysterious way, scattered scraps of the secret memoranda reached various European periodicals and were published by them in spite of attempted suppression.

These disconnected portions have been gathered and pieced together. They are presented in complete, connected form in the May issue of CURRENT HISTORY—the first and only magazine to present this important document in full.

DO you know the facts that are molding this most decisive period in history, or are you judging the vital issues on fragmentary news, unfounded rumors and incomplete reports?

YOU can know the truth about the War. Its history is being written by the men who are directing it. Their official reports, utterances, and documents show the progress of the vast struggle; the political and economic changes; the outpouring of tragedy, heroism and sacrifice.

Every essential word of their documents is published monthly in Current History. No other publication covers the war so completely, so authoritatively.

75 P. C. MOTOR CUT PLANNED

Automobile Makers Oppose Big Curtailment by U. S. in Passenger Cars.

DISCRIMINATION HINTED

Industries Board Intends to Restrict Allotment of Coal and Steel to Factories.

Special Despatch to THE SUN.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—A curtailment in passenger automobile production in excess of 75 per cent. for the period of the war has been virtually decided on by the War Industries Board acting in conjunction with P. B. Noyes, chief of the conservation division of the Federal Administration. An order in the matter restricting the allotment of both coal and steel to automobile factories so as to accomplish this will probably be issued in the next few days.

Things came to a climax today in a meeting of automobile producers with Chairman Baruch of the War Industries Board. A definite figure in curtailment was not mentioned, but the automobile men were told it "must be drastic."

A reduction of 75 per cent. was mentioned earlier in the week, but a consideration of the matter after to-day's conference with the automobile representatives is said to have resulted in a decision to raise this figure several points nearer the 100 per cent. mark.

Chairman Baruch, at the automobile conference, appointed a committee to consider the matter further, naming the following as members: For the War Industries Board, Alexander Legge, J. Leonard Replogle, George N. Peek and Hugh Fraine. For the automobile companies, W. C. Durant, General Motors Company; John N. Willys, Willys-Overland Company; John F. Dodge, Dodge Brothers, and Walter Flanders, Maxwell Automobile Company.

Point to Discrimination.

Assertions that rank discrimination is being practised against the automobile producers as compared with relative industries were made by the automobile men. They pointed particularly to the curtailment of 30 per cent. in piano manufacture and reductions of similar extent in other industries classed as "lesser essential."

Neither the officials of the War Industries Board nor Mr. Noyes would discuss the matter.

Meanwhile the automobile producers are prepared to carry their battle further and to insist upon an equitable allotment of steel and coal, as compared with relative industries. They demanded enlightenment on the whole scheme of industrial regulation and curtailment.

Rumblings from Washington

Business men will seriously consider the warning reprinted at the left.

A reduced production of passenger cars will mean

....radically increased prices.

....inability to get a new car that will give economical service.

The performance of the current Chalmers passenger cars in the hands of owners has caused a sharp advance in their demand. The Chalmers-built motor—with the "hot spot" and "ramshorn" manifold, gives an economy and ease of operation you cannot appreciate until you sit behind the wheel.

We can't foretell an advance in Chalmers prices. Those economically inclined will take this warning thoughtfully and buy NOW.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION AND STOCK MARKETS

COTTON WORKERS ASK RISE

Mill Operatives in Manchester District, England, Make Demands.

Cotton mill operatives in the Manchester district, in England, have presented demands for advances in wages averaging about 30 per cent. on the present standard wage lists, according to advices received by cotton men in New York recently. A mass meeting was held in Manchester not long ago, at which representatives of about 250,000 operatives voted to present demands formulated by the union leaders, contingently upon the continuance by the Cotton Control Board of grants for temporary unemployment caused by the stringent restrictions on cotton manufactures now in force.

It is understood that a conference, with a view to seeking a basis of compromise and understanding between the operatives and mill owners, is to be held, if it has not already been held, at the instance of Sir Herbert Dixon, Chairman of the Cotton Control Board. The dispute is arousing keen interest in the cotton trade, one of the remarkable features being the unanimity of the leaders of the various mill men's unions, which have hitherto been mutually jealous and not overinclined to agree. At the present time, however, all the unions are standing together.

British Hay Price Fixed at $30 a Ton

The Army Council of Great Britain, according to The London Times, has fixed a minimum price for the 1918 hay crop in the British Isles of £6 10s., or about $30 a ton, at the stack, including cartage to the nearest railway station. It is possible, however, that the final price may considerably exceed this, as the council admitted that the season was not far enough advanced to show the probable quantity and quality, and to permit estimates of cost in proportion to yield per acre. The price of hay in the United Kingdom before the war was usually less than one-third this figure.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

The California Packing Corporation declared yesterday a dividend of $1 a share for the quarter on the common stock, payable June 15 to stock owners of record May 31. The payment last quarter was 50 cents a share.

The S. S. Kresge Company reports sales to a total of $2,846,237 in April, an increase of $286,379 over the same month last year.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Make Further Gains in Active Session—Surplus Reserve Increases.

Enthusiasm which had marked each day since the closing of the loan campaign carried the list through the short session yesterday without any indications of uneasiness over possible adverse news developments that might arise today. Activity was on a scale only rarely seen on a Saturday, and prices in nearly all departments moved to higher levels. Sentiment throughout the financial district was too bullish to be affected by the usual week-end selling, and those traders who looked for a substantial reaction after the big rise of the week which would allow them to cover short commitments were disappointed.

The commanding position in this market is still held by Steel, which dipped to 107⅞ yesterday only to swing back close to its highest price for the week, closing with a net gain of 1¼. The measure of the week's demand for this issue is a gain of 12 points; it is up now 23 points from the low of the year, which was made at the end of March. The tobacco issues moved forward sharply yesterday, while Distillers went to a new high by crossing 60. American Ice and Sugar, the Marines and Mexican Petroleum all joined in the advance and closed materially higher.

Opening at 98.40, their final price at the close of the first day in which dealings were permitted, the new 4¼ per cent. bonds sold off on moderate offerings to 98.20, the last and lowest price reported. The decline is in line with expectations in investment circles, where it has been pointed out since the anouncement of the terms decided upon for the new offering that there was no reason to believe that the 4¼s would sell above a parity with the second 4s. A number of banks evidently bought more of the cash bonds than theye were able to sell, or were prepared to hold, and the excess has been liquidated to free funds for more profitable use in loans.

The bank statement showed clearly the influence of payments in the loan account. With an increase of nearly $98,000,000 in loans net deposits decreased by $149,000,000. Government deposits gained $130,000,000, and the member banks' credits at the Reserve Bank were expanded by $46,000,000. The result was an increase in surplus reserves of almost $66,000,000, bringing this item to $102,807,000, comparing with a previous high record for this year of $96,681,000 reported on Jan. 28.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Strong Saturday Market.

The state of the stock market as the week ended could be fairly well described in the statement that Distillers Securities, Baldwin Locomotive, Corn Products and American Linseed established new high prices for the year in Saturday's short session. Doubtless considerable profit-taking sales were put through, but these were absorbed with ease in practically every stock which advanced vigorously from Monday to Friday. The offerings in Steel were taken and, in addition, buyers were willing to bid the stock up 1⅛ points over the preceding day's close.

Extend Brokerage Facilities.

The Stock Exchange bulletin contained yesterday what appeared to be an indication of an expanding interest in securities in the Middle West. James E. Bennett & Co., a firm formed about three months ago with headquarters in Chicago, announced the opening of twenty-two new branch offices in Illinois and Missouri. In connection with so extensive an expansion of a brokerage firm's facilities the question might be asked: Have the efforts throughout the country to distribute the three Liberty loans quickened interest in bonds and stocks generally?

Awaiting the Copper Conference.

In comparison with the steel stocks copper issues lagged in last week's upward movement. The Street is waiting with considerable interest the result of the conference between copper producers and the War Industries Board on May 22. The feeling is held in some quarters that the Government will permit an increase in the metal price which will tend to offset rising costs of mining and refining, but no certainty of such a result of the meeting prevails.

Swiss Francs Up, Lire Down.

The market for Swiss exchange advanced to a high level yesterday which had not been attained since the extraordinary upward surge at the outbreak of the war in 1914. At 4.11 francs to the dollar for cable transfers the Swiss rate showed a premium of nearly 26 per cent. above the normal figure. Conversely, the American dollar stood at approximately an equivalent discount in Switzerland. Italian exchange, moving in the direction opposite to that pursued by Swiss exchange, dipped into new low ground with cables quoted at 11.04½. As on other recent days, lire reflected at New York its declining tendency in London.

Oil Stocks Move Slowly.

The oil stocks reflected to a moderate degree only last week's rise in other shares, and in this precedent was followed. In other bull markets the stocks on the Exchange have frequently scored large gains before speculative operations were pronounced among the oils. Standard Oil of New Jersey and Standard of Kansas gained 10 points, and Atlantic Refining, Cumberland Pipe Line, and Eureka Pipe Line advanced about as much, but these were the largest increases reported. Among the miscellaneous oil issues Merritt gained 2⅜ points and Midwest Refining 2 points. Houston Oil, the subject of many erratic movements, advanced with considerable speed yesterday, leaving off with a gain of 4 points for the week.

Tire Prices Again Move Up.

Automobile tire prices are advancing again. The Goodrich and the Sterling companies have announced an increase of 10 per cent., to be put into effect shortly.

British Spinners' Profits.

The English cotton manufacturers have only been able to secure a fraction of their usual takings from this years cotton crop, but a compilation by the London Economist indicates that their profits on what cotton they have worked up have been ample. Based on results of nineteen firms since Jan. 1, last, these indicate that the average earnings this year on share capital have been at the rate of 45 per cent. per annum, and on total capitalization about 32 per cent. per annum. Meanwhile their employes are agitating for higher wages.

KENNECOTT COPPER SEEKS LARGER FIELD

Would Expand Income Through Undertakings Other Than Alaska Operations.

TO DEVELOP BRADEN MINES

Bonanza Deposits in Far North, Although Exceptionally Rich, Are of Limited Life.

An important feature of the Kennecott Copper Corporation's report for 1917 was the evidence supplied that the management is striving to expand its sources of income through undertakings other than the mining of copper on its Alaska properties. It was known when the company was formed that the bonanza metal deposits in Alaska were of limited life. The deposits of copper are exceptionally rich, but at the rate war demands have caused them to be taken from the earth relatively few years would see their exhaustion.

The Braden Copper Mines Company in Chile was taken over two years ago in order to expand the mining resources of the parent organization, and the report issued last week noted that part of the Kennecott's earnings is to be used to further production in South America.

"Owing primarily to the great advance in prices of all material and equipment, and to a lesser degree to increased ocean freight rates to Chile," Stephen Birch, President of the Kennecott, said, "it is probable that the Braden Company, before completing its 10,000-ton plant, will be in need of funds beyond current earnings and finances in hand. The advisability of this corporation conserving, to a degree, its cash to meet this contingency, the constantly increasing cost in the properties in Alaska, the large amount of cash needful to care for Federal income and excess profits taxes, and the general uncertainties of the future, all led your Directors to believe that an especially conservative dividend policy should be pursued, and to that end declared a distribution for the quarter ended Dec. 31, 1917, of $1 per share."

Big Production Last Year.

Despite handicaps, the Braden properties scored a production last year which compared favorably with that reported by the Kennecott mines in the North. The output amounted to 41,010,502 pounds, while the Kennecott reported deliveries amounting to 56,904,850 pounds. The Braden copper was sold at an average price of 31.80 cents a pound, more than 4⅝ cents higher than the Kennecott received, but this difference was more than neutralized by unusual costs and the depreciation of the American dollar in terms of Chilean currency.

The Braden report showed that a United States dollar in 1917 purchased only 4.02 pesos, compared with 5.41 in 1916 and 6.15 in 1915. The direct effect on the wage account of the rise in exchange was an advance in Chilean wages of 35 per cent. last year the wages of 35 per cent. last year over the average of 1915.

"In the matter of supplies from the United States," S. S. Sorensen, General Manager of the Braden Company, reported, "we, of course, suffer in line with the home markets and, in addition, by the war freights in shipping goods down here and the copper back home. This also affects prices of products of the country, which are kept up in sympathy with the increased prices from the home sources. Then, too, even on the basis of unaltered prices in Chilean currency, the exchange difference taxes us to the same extent as it does on Chilean wages. For our earnings are entirely from copper sold for United States gold, which have to buy Chilean pesos to pay for Chilean products.

"Coke is nearly four times what it was, is hard to get, and is of inferior quality. Imported lumber has increased about three times, native lumber about double. In but very few cases is it possible to substitute, although we are on the alert to do so. So we are practically governed by prices now ruling in the United States, with the added handicap of scarce and costly freight. The latter also applies to our blister copper, freight and insurance on which from Valparaiso is costing 5.8 times its pre-war price."

Look Far Into Future.

In the face of these difficulties both the Kennecott and Braden managements indicated in their reports that the work was to be pushed to the end of expanding the South American production. If the Braden earnings are not sufficient to meet necessary outlays the Kennecott Corporation's income is to be drawn upon. The purpose is not only to turn out as much copper as possible while the United States and the European Allies need it but to prepare for the later period when the output of the two concerns may be brought to an aggregate which will figure largely in the world's supply and increase the earnings available for dividends on the Kennecott shares.

To the same end the Kennecott Corporation added largely last year to its holdings of stock of the Utah Copper Company. The purchase of 182,000 shares brought the aggregate of Kennecott's investment in this company up to 616,504 shares, equal to slightly more than 38 per cent. of all the Utah stock outstanding. This investment, the report showed, is carried on the books at $51,994,060, and at the current rate of dividends is bringing in $6,165,040 per year. Last year, when the Utah was disbursing $14 per share a year, compared with the current $10 rate, the Kennecott treasury received $7,147,801 from its holdings, an amount equal to 37 per cent. of the full net income of the year.

From its Braden copper stock the Kennecott received no dividends, as the earnings went back into the property. Additional purchases of Braden shares through an exchange of Kennecott stock at the rate of one share for each three and three-quarter shares of Braden made the total holding at the end of the year 2,565,691 shares of the 2,500,706 shares outstanding. These were carried on the books at a value of $30,472,813.

In considering the Kennecott Corporation in respect to its future outlook, mention should be made of a deal now in process of completion whereby the Motherlode Copper Company is to be acquired by interests connected with the Kennecott. The Motherlode property is close to the bonanza mines of the Kennecott, and its ores are reported to be of the same quality of richness as the ores of the latter company. Lack of adequate capital has retarded the development of the Motherlode lands, and this is to be supplied by the new owners. While no announcement has been made in regard to future plans, it is expected in some financial quarters that the Motherlode will later be acquired by the Kennecott, a consummation which would add substantially to the scope of the Kennecott's operations in Alaska.

A New Investment Field.

An indication of the belief in Wall Street that the Liberty Loan campaigns will have an educational result in broadening the field for bond sales, is the announced intention of the National City Company to open an uptown branch on the ground floor at Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue. Many Stock Exchange houses have uptown branches, but this is the first case of a distinctively bond house opening one.

THE COTTON MARKET

May Contracts Relatively Firm—Rest of List Declines 25 to 65 Points.

The local cotton market looked very weak yesterday morning at the opening and before the short interest took pity upon it and also took profits for the week-end prices had slipped down nearly $3 a bale on the average from Friday's closing quotations. May contracts alone remained relatively firm, presumably because of the unwillingness of speculators to put out much short cotton within the relatively narrow time limit left for dealing in this month. The close was steady on covering, but showing net declines of 52 to 65 points, and 25 points on May.

As had been indicated by Friday's weak close, there were many overnight selling orders around the ring at the gong, and first prices registered a decline of 22 to 38 points. The continued good weather reports, combined with trade selling supposed to represent the undoing of hedges against spot purchases in the South, brought in fresh speculative offerings, and quotations went steadily down throughout the active part of the session without any support showing itself anywhere. The covering rallies at the close did no more than stop the decline.

All the crop news of the day was good, planting was reported practically completed and the cotton coming up well nearly everywhere. The only counterbalance to the generally bearish tendency was the steadily growing confidence in the mastery of the allied navies over the submarine, with consequent hope for increased exports as Summer comes on. Southern spot markets were from 50 points lower to 25 higher, generally unchanged, with little or no business save at one or two points.

Yesterday's quotations follow:

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Stocks closed strong after an active session yesterday on the Consolidated Stock Exchange. While the general movement of the market was irregular, the tendency was upward and the undertone strong. Profit taking was frequently in evidence throughout the day, and at times caused sharp reactions. Closing prices, however, were but fractionally below the high levels and the active list had substantial gains.

BIG IMPORTS OF FOOD OILS.

United States Brought In $75,000,000 Worth In 1917.

One remarkable result of the war, according to The Foreign Trade Record of the National City Bank, has been to increase the consumption of vegetable oils and fats and so-called "food oils" in the United States, and indeed throughout the world. The need for food conservation and the elimination of waste, and the employment of every possible source of food, has been responsible for this. In all countries the tendency has been to conserve animal fats for the actual fighters and send the people at home to vegetable substitutes. In 1917 the United States, though a beginner in the war, imported about $75,000,000 worth of food oils and materials for their production, about one-fourth of it coming from the Philippines.

In 1917 this country imported 183,000,000 pounds of coconut oil, against 58,000,000 pounds in 1914, and 367,000,000 pounds of copra or dried cocoanut kernels for making oil, against 60,000,000 pounds in 1914. Imports of soya bean oil, much of which is used for food, rose from 13,000,000 pounds in 1914 to no less than 265,000,000 pounds last year. Another increase was that from 7,000,000 pounds of peanut oil in 1914 to 27,000,000 pounds last year. Most of the oil seeds and nuts come from India, Ceylon, the Dutch East Indies, China, and the Philippines.

CUT RATE CUTS DAMAGES.

Railway Not Responsible for Accident to User of Clergy Ticket.

Julia M. Anderson, widow of a clergyman, who was killed on the Erie Railroad in 1913, sued the company and obtained judgment. The Court of Appeals has just set the verdict aside on the ground that the deceased had taken advantage of his profession and had obtained a cut-rate ticket, paying only $1.20, instead of the regular fare of $2.35 for a journey from Elmira to Leroy, N. Y. On the back of the ticket was stamped the provision that in consideration of the low rate the purchaser released the company from all responsibility regarding his safety during the trip.

The court found that the same release, given by the possessor of a free ticket, is operative in the matter of a reduced rate ticket.

VARIED PHASES OF THE COUNTRY'S BUSINESS LIFE

The Merchant's Point of View

Under ordinary circumstances, the very favorable Government crop report issued on Wednesday last would afford a reliable guide for business men to follow in preparing for the trade of next Fall, Winter, and Spring. The basis of the country's prosperity is the yield of the soil. When crops fail, the business structure slumps on both its domestic and foreign sides. When yields are large, optimism prevails and enterprise is spurred. Now, when the outlook is for a possible wheat crop of a billion bushels and for a record crop of rye, to say nothing of good cotton, hay, and oats crops, the promise of good mercantile business would seem to be of the best. But the conditions are unusual, and this makes many things uncertain which would otherwise be sure. Much of the wheat which will be harvested will go toward feeding the Allies and will be paid for at fixed prices. A great deal of the money which will be realized from the crops will be applied to loans to the Government and to various philanthropic agencies in connection with the war. The preaching of economy in expenditures is getting added force from the prevalence of high prices for nearly every article in use. What will be the combined effect on merchandising of these various factors is very uncertain at this time. So, merchants are inclined to go slow until the trend is more clearly defined. They are buying, but they are cautious except when it is necessary to meet immediate wants.

Control of Raw Materials.

It is easy to lay too much stress on the official interim report of the British Committee on Commercial Policy, the substance of which was received by cable and was printed on Tuesday. This recommends the control by Great Britain and the allied nations of certain raw materials, like wool, cotton, jute, and the like, during the transition period after the war. These raw materials come from the countries now hostile to the Central Powers, or from their colonies. It is recognized that, as soon as hostilities cease, Germany and Austria-Hungary will be obliged, as a matter of self-preservation, to get busy as quickly as possible in producing goods needed at home as well as for foreign trade, and that, in order to do this, large imports of the raw materials will be essential. Under unchecked conditions, so great a demand would have the effect of causing prices to shoot up abruptly in the countries now at war with the Central Powers, even if it did not produce a scarcity in them. It is barely possible that, for a time, there would not be enough of the raw materials available to go around. The Germans, for their part, have taken the matter into account in their methodical way. They have arranged to have what buying is to be done in foreign countries done in bulk by the Government itself, or under Government auspices, and then to apportion the materials to manufacturers. This is to prevent competition among the latter with the resulting price advances.

Propositions Are Tentative.

Incidentally, also, there is a well-defined impression that stocks of raw materials are held for German account in a number of the British colonies and in certain of the allied countries. These when drawn on will help deplete the quantities on which the people of such allied countries can draw, and, perhaps, put them at a disadvantage. If a control should be established by the Allies for the transition period after the war, which is reckoned at about three years, it would apply to such stocks as are held for German account as well as all others. The general idea is that the British and their allies shall have the first choice at moderate prices, and that the Central Powers shall have the chance of getting what can be spared for them. All this, of course, takes it for granted that the terms of peace will be dictated to the Central Powers. While this must needs be the outcome of the war, however, it still seems probable that trade matters will be among the things to be definitely settled in the terms of peace, and that all tentative propositions, like the one under discussion, and like the ones put forward at the Paris Conference, will have to be modified to meet the conditions under which the peace treaties are ratified. If the Hohenzollerns and the Hapsburgs are consigned to the scrap heap, for instance, the disposition to a "live and let live" policy may be more apparent.

Not So Very Unprepared.

Attention was called a week ago to certain statements contained in an address to the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers by its President, Albert F. Bemis, regarding what he considered "fair profits" in wartime. But there was another feature in that address which is worthy of notice. He declared the war had found the cottons trade "with equipment insufficient to its needs." The reason for this, he said, was that "for five or ten years prior to the war" the cotton goods trade was comparatively poor, and, in consequence, improvements and enlargements were comparatively small. He added: "The annual increase in the number of operating spindles in the United States during the five years from 1910 to 1915 averaged only 2 per cent. against an average of 4 per cent. for the ten years prior thereto." Even if these figures were a fair presentation of conditions, which they are not, they would not bear out the assertion that the cotton goods trade was in bad shape for five or ten years before the war. Now the war, as is fairly well known, began in August, 1914. By taking the year 1915 instead of the year before as the end of a period, a totally erroneous impression is created, because 1915 was the only year in the history of American cotton mills which showed a smaller number of operating spindles than the year preceding. The three years 1911, 1912, and 1913 immediately before the war showed an increase of 3,253,000 spindles, or an average of nearly 1,100,000 per year. In the ten-year period from 1900 to 1910 the average increase per year was only 870,500. From 1915 to 1917 the operating spindles increased by more than 2,600,000, which would seem to indicate that the industry was not in bad shape so far as productive facilities are concerned. Nor is it at present, when it is consuming somewhere in the neighborhood of 7,200,000 bales of cotton as against 3,873,000 in 1900.

Exhibits of American Dyes.

Not the least of the instructive exhibits at the Textile Exposition, which closed yesterday, were those of domestic dyes. The makers of these products have had to face almost as many obstacles to their use, caused by prejudice or ignorance, as they had to encounter in the manufacture of the articles themselves. Users wished to try the dyes by entirely new standards, and expected of the American ones much more than ever was claimed for those of foreign origin. The matter of fastness was one of the sticklers. No dye is absolutely fast under all possible conditions. What has been wanted of any one of them has been its adaptability to the uses to which it was to be put. It would be nonsense, for instance, to insist that a dye intended for woolen clothing fabrics should keep its color if put through the processes of a modern laundry. The domestic dyemakers have succeeded in making a wide range of colors which answer the purposes for which they are intended. Each is, at least, as good in all respects as the corresponding one which used to be obtained from abroad. While the range of colors is not yet as complete as the foreign ones, there are enough varieties for every practical purpose except, perhaps, in the classes of alizarines and vat colors, and these are now being turned out in increasing quantity. The manufacture of synthetic indigo in sufficient amount to more than meet all domestic requirements is already assured. Taken in all, the dye industry is a fine exemplar of the skill and industry of American chemists.

Conditions in Cotton Trade.

A number of explanations have been forthcoming to account for the recent slump in cotton quotations. One which may have had an influence grew out of the reduction of the exports to Great Britain. The purchasers, it is said, finding it impossible or unprofitable to ship the cotton they had bought, sold it and forced prices down. They are said to be confident of securing what they will need out of this year's crop at lower prices. Quotations on the Exchange here have zigzagged up and down with some violent swings, the motive power being rumors about the weather and growing conditions. In the goods' market there has been a little more conservatism than usual, and prices of printcloths especially have shown a downward tendency. This was only partly due to the sales by second hands, otherwise speculators. As a matter of fact the mill men themselves are by no means assured that they will be permitted to keep up prices at the high notch to which they have been pegged. The Government, however, has been very considerate with them. In taking 70 per cent. of the denim production for the remainder of the year it is allowing a price of 76 cents a pound. The manufacturers thought they would get 80 cents. Both seem very high when it is considered that the raw material cost did not average over 25 cents a pound. To the civilian trade prices are kept up because of the impression, sedulously cultivated, that there will not be enough goods to go around. It may yet appear that more goods will be put on the market than can be sold. In underwear of divers kinds, deliveries have been made uncertain because of urgent Government demands.

Supplies of Wool and Woolens.

Details of the War Industries Board's plan for handling wool are being gradually worked out. The prices for the material on a scoured basis have been given to the spinners of yarns so that they may be enabled to proceed. Arrangements are also being made to secure certain classes of wool from Argentina. In that country British buying has virtually stopped, and this will prevent any upward movement in prices there. Great Britain is more interested just now in getting wheat from Argentina than wool. Enough and to spare of the latter has come from Australia. In this country the clip is beginning to come in market, and wool dealers are a little perplexed in trying to accommodate themselves to the new plan of handling it on a commission basis. The census of wool in this country, exclusive of the new clip, on March 31 showed a consumption in the first quarter of the year of about 170,000,000 pounds in the grease. This does not presage a scarcity. The goods market is quiescent, except for military purposes, which will interfere somewhat with deliveries, but not so much as was feared. If there should be any Spring openings they will be later than usual, but at present it looks as though formal openings will be dispensed with. Clothing manufacturers and makers of women's coats and suits believe they will have a good season ahead from the indications they have received. The latter are showing early Fall lines.

MERCHANTS HAVE PROBLEMS TO MEET

Some Idea of Those Which Confront the Dry Goods Retailers of the Country.

With the time arrived for making plans for next Fall and Winter, it is felt that the retail dry goods merchants of the country now are facing one of the most critical periods in the whole history of the trade. Caution is being urged on every hand, and it is pointed out that sound judgment was never so necessary as it is today in solving the problem, not only of what and how much to buy, but of when to buy it. The changing complexion of business due to war conditions which, it is thought, will become more pronounced as time goes on, and the uncertainties as to future supplies and prices, must all be given the most careful consideration if false steps which might prove fatal are to be avoided.

"Retail merchants may imagine that they have had problems to meet in the past," said E. L. Howe, Executive Secretary of the National Retail Dry Goods Association: "Such problems, however, were of small importance, whatever they may have been, compared to the problems which merchants must solve in the future. Ever since the opening of the war I have used every available opportunity to emphasize the fact that business was going through a great readjustment, that business would be good but different, and that the merchant who would make good would be the one with sufficient vision to foresee the changes and plot his work accordingly. A great many of these changes have already come, but not until now has retail business begun to feel the full pressure of war conditions.

"Precedent is of practically no value at the present time in making future plans. We are sailing an uncharted sea. For example, the retail merchant must meet the changed conditions occasioned by the placing of embargoes by the War Trade Board upon imports and exports. It is quite probable that such restrictions will tighten rather than loosen while the war lasts. The plans of the Government have to change to meet the changes in the various theatres of war. Probably a million more men than was originally planned will be called to the colors this year. This will require more material, more food, more supplies of every sort, and more transportation both by land and sea. Practically every industry in the country will feel the change.

"The Government has taken charge of the wool supply and may very likely take similar action regarding cotton and cotton manufacturing. Pressure to reduce the production of nonessentials will undoubtedly tighten so that labor and raw materials may be diverted to more necessary articles. It is not unlikely that merchants will face simplified styles or at least some restriction in the range or variety. They will most certainly face a change in the character of the merchandise which will be wanted. The people will purchase freely, but their purchases will be confined more to staples and to necessities. The labor situation is one that must also receive careful consideration. It is not likely to improve while the war lasts.

"Merchants are now facing the necessity of making plans for next Fall. There are those who are in a position to be well informed who believe that the market on some merchandise will change in a price way, and that we shall see lower prices in the not far distant future. This is a phase of the situation which merchants cannot afford to ignore. The question of future prices must be weighed against the prospects for future supplies. Merchants must decide for themselves whether it is best to pay present prices in any given line and be assured of their stocks or whether it would be wiser to wait until some idea as to what course prices will take can be obtained. We have for some time urged merchants to give careful consideration to transportation by motor trucks, and this subject will be discussed most thoroughly at the meeting of our association to be held in Chicago the latter part of this month.

"During the last year we have seen some phenomenal advances. I have just received a telegram from a merchant in California, who states that an ordinary nightgown of 64 count muslin, for which he paid $5 a dozen in the beginning of the season, was invoiced to him the other day at $11.50 a dozen. A standard make of cambric waists that was $2.35 is now $4.50. All of these advances compel the retailer who has to pay them to charge a proportionate increase to his customers, and he is likely to be blamed by them and accused of profiteering when such is not the case. The purchasing public must feel that prices coming to them are fair, otherwise there is bound to be a harmful reaction.

"Summoning up, the retailer is facing problems that must be solved, and in solving them he must have vision and must take into consideration every angle of commercial and political life. Merchants are facing more than a mere buying and selling proposition. Personally, I believe that they appreciate the conditions and that they are using every endeavor to solve these great problems."

Are Violating the Law.

Whether he knows it or not, more than one manufacturer of children's clothing—both boys' and girls'—is violating Federal regulations prohibiting the use of insignia of the United States army and navy on garments worn by persons other than men actually in service. Quite a few varieties of children's garments are seen here with marks of this kind, including naval insignia on girls' middy blouses and similar ones on sailor suits for little boys. The same thing is true of "army" uniforms for the latter. Yesterday suits of this kind were seen here that even carried on the shoulders the gold oak leaves signifying the rank of Major.

Triple Capes Popular.

The vogue for capes this Spring has resulted in a great variety of treatments of the original idea, and one of the most popular of these is said to be the triple cape. As its name implies, it is three capes in one. They are of graduated lengths, the shortest on the outside, and usually the longest only reaches to the waist. Lately capes of this type have been used extensively with sleeveless coats of the same material. They seem to be attracting a great deal of attention and may be worn with a dress of almost any sort.

RAW SILK MARKETS.

A Firm Tone in All of Them, with Good Buying in Canton.

The Japanese raw silk market has quieted down in the last week, but prices have remained firm and unchanged. Reelers are offering sparingly. Stocks are light, being estimated at 8,400 bales, and mostly of inferior quality. The situation is generally regarded as strong, and a resumption of active buying is practically certain to result in further price advances. Cable service to and from the Far East is still badly hampered, rendering the transaction of business very difficult. The further advance in exchange has also affected business. News of the new crop is lacking at the moment, but word concerning it is expected shortly.

Canton continues to tell of good buying, principally for American account, and prices have gone up there on both fine and coarse sizes. The first crop is reported as being of good quality and about 1,000 bales larger than last year's. Reports received from Shanghai by A. P. Villa & Brothers, Inc., say that fair-sized transactions have taken place in tsatlees and tussahs at advancing prices and that no high-grade tsatlees are left in the market. Steam filatures have been in good demand, and sales of approximately 1,000 bales of the new crop have been reported.

Increased buying on the part of European manufacturers has strengthened the market at Milan, and prices there continue decidedly firm. In this city business is good, and the demand is steadily broadening. Manufacturers are all very busy, and are quite optimistic as to the future.

GRAY GOODS BUYING SLOW.

Interest in the Government's Takings of 39-inch 68-72s.

In the absence of any real buying of gray goods in the local market yesterday, more than the usual amount of interest was aroused by a report that the Government had issued orders to commission houses requiring them to defer deliveries to the civilian trade on nearby contracts of 39-inch 68-72s and turn the goods over to the Quartermaster's Department. In one quarter the deliveries affected were said to be May, June and July. General inquiry, however, disclosed that what the Government actually has done has been to take over about 20 per cent. of the production of these goods each week, deliveries to begin at once and run until Oct. 1. It was intimated that the construction in question was wanted for use as outer cloth in raincoats for the army, the inner cloth being of 38½-inch 64-60 construction.

Business in printcloths and sheetings lacked snap, though prices were firmer in most quarters of the trade. Second-hand asking prices on several standard constructions of sheetings for immediate shipment were a quarter of a cent higher yesterday than the same goods sold on Friday for similar delivery. In the specialties, business was reported at 23 cents on May-June 37½-inch 64-88, 4.70 sateens, ostensibly for Red Cross uses.

CUTTING OUT LUXURIES.

A Caution Against Sending Such Things to New Zealand.

There is a growing sentiment in favor of cutting out imports of luxuries into New Zealand in the interests of economy, according to Consul General Alfred A. Winslow in Auckland. He advises American manufacturers and exporters to bear this in mind and not to waste time pushing nonessential lines in that market.

"These matters are not only being discussed by the New Zealand Government," continues Mr. Winslow, "but by the Chambers of Commerce in the different centres of the country and the general public as well, which means that there will be a marked decline in demand for these lines from now on until the close of the war. This is not being done, however, because of any shortage of money, because money is comparatively easy here, but rather because of the earnestness with which the people are inclined to meet present war conditions, especially the shortage of shipping.

"This will mean that on the return of normal conditions there will be a splendid opening in New Zealand for many of the better lines, since stocks will be remarkably low."

Navy Blue Much in Demand.

One of the features of the color demand of late in practically all kinds of merchandise has been the increasing call for navy blue. While this color is always a staple in women's outer garments, until a comparatively recent time it was not very much in the running this season where millinery, hosiery, blouses, &c., were concerned. Now, however, navy blue hats are very much wanted, and bid fair to top the color demand until warmer weather hands over the palm to white. Navy hosiery for women, particularly in the better grades, is also much sought and none too plentiful. Navy blouses duplicate this condition from all accounts.

Gingham Dresses for Children.

Gingham is proving to be a very popular fabric for children's bloomer dresses. It is reported that these garments are being sold in large quantities in practically all parts of the country. They are taken usually in the brighter color combinations in conventional gingham designs. For more dressy wear, white lawn seems to be very much in favor. Many of these models are attractively set off with hemstitching in one or more colors around the edges of the collars, cuffs, and pockets. In both these lines, good quality materials and the best of workmanship are the most sought.

Lingerie Waists Wanted.

Lingerie waists for Summer wear are having a very heavy sale in many sections, according to reports from manufacturers in this city. Batiste is among the leading fabrics of the season thus far. The slip-on type of blouse is said to be increasing its popularity in the late business. Many of these garments are being made with tailored collars with which narrow ribbon ties are to be worn. Though light colors are in demand, it is said that white waists trimed with black and with black ties are growing in popularity.

Wood Cellulose as Cattle Feed.

Extensive experiments in Sweden have shown that wood cellulose is an excellent cattle feed, and the Government is pushing its manufacture as much as possible, according to Commercial Agent Norman L. Anderson.

SITE COUNTS AS HELP TO BUSINESS

Grouping of Stores of a Similar Kind Makes It Easier for the Shoppers.

If an owner of a retail store in this city, whether his stock consist of anything from butter and eggs to dry goods, were asked why the net profit of his business is not larger than it is, the chances are ten to one that he would attribute his limited return primarily to the high rent he has to pay. This assertion is made on the authority of a local manufacturer who not only has received this reply to questions put by him, but who has a wide knowledge of trade conditions in the other leading cities of the country.

"We will waive the dill pickle man and the suspender retailer for the time being," this manufacturer said to a TIMES reporter yesterday, "and confine our talk to the retail dry goods business. To begin with, it is an open secret that pessimism often exists among the retailers of this kind of merchandise here when merchants in other cities are seeing their bank balances grow daily. If you ask one of the local retailers why his net return on his investment and his mental energy is so limited, and the assertion has been made that there would be no net profit if discounts were eliminated or reduced, the chances are ten to one that he will tell you it is due in the first place to the excessive rents which have to be paid in cases where the store property is not owned by the merchant.

"Now, right here is where I want to question that reply. Admitting that the rents here are enough to keep any merchant awake nights if there is any slacking up in the consumer demand, the thing that is keeping the local stores from making more money than they do, and particularly the larger ones, is their comparative isolation. On lower Broadway you find one big store, Fourteenth Street has another, and on Broadway in the vicinity of Thirty-fourth Street you find three more. On Fifth Avenue, between Thirty-fourth and Fortieth Streets, you find four more, and on Forty-second Street there is another. About midtown on the east side is a store all by itself, and on 125th Street you will find some of pretty good size. The specialty shops are sprinkled all around.

"I do not want to be construed as saying that the stores to which I refer are not making money. Obviously, if they were not they would go out of business. The point I am trying to make is that there would be more money in it for everybody, manufacturers included, if it were possible to concentrate these stores in any one part of the city, as the big retail establishments of Chicago are grouped on State Street in the loop district. I have good reason for asserting that the store rents in the loop district of Chicago are higher than in any other business district in the country, and yet very little complaint is heard there about the smallness of net profits.

"There are two things that can be held responsible for this: In the first place, the loop is no place of beauty. No woman would think of going there for a stroll, as she would on Fifth Avenue. She goes there to buy, and when she gets there she finds the stores almost literally under her thumb. She does not have to go to one part of the city to buy shoes at her favorite store for this merchandise, to another section to buy a dress at a store she prefers for that purpose, and to still another section in order to purchase a hat in the place she has been accustomed to getting her millinery.

"In this city a situation of this kind is not at all difficult to imagine, but in Chicago a woman can go to the loop and within a few blocks find such stores as Marshall Field's, the Boston Store, Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., The Fair, Hillman's, Mandel Brothers, and Rothschild's. If she doesn't find what she wants in one store, a few steps will bring her to another, and so on. Somebody in the loop is certain to sell her the thing she is looking for. There are no long stretches to be covered, as from one shopping section to another in this city, at the expense of her time, temper, and energy.

"Take Philadelphia. There the big stores are lined along Market Street, between Eighth and Thirteenth, while the leading specialty shops are found in the same stretch on Chestnut Street. Here again is found the concentration of selling that means easy buying for the shopper and increased sales and profits for the retailers. And, while they are doubtless below the New York and Chicago scales, store rents in Philadelphia are by no means low.

"In Boston, concentration is again found, with the main shopping district of the city practically confined to three or four blocks along Washington Street and near it on the streets crossing Washington. The St. Louis shopping district is a little more spread out, but there the biggest stores can be found along Olive and Locust Streets, between Sixth and Tenth. Taking the Famous & Barr Company store as a starting point, you can cover the chief retail district of St. Louis at a walk in a surprisingly short time. This means easy shopping and plenty of it.

"Eight blocks along Market Street, with the adjacent thoroughfares, suffice to hold the leading stores of San Francisco. Among them are such establishments as the Emporium, the City of Paris, Hale Brothers, O'Connor, Moffat & Co., &c. Here again the shopper can fill her needs at a minimum of physical effort, and the temptation to go home with her money unspent, which often assails a woman here when she is beginning to get tired and faces the prospect of walking several blocks to another group of stores, is missing. The result is that a coat, or a suit, or what not, invariably goes to the shopper's home out there, and her money goes into the coffers of the retailer. Concentration certainly helps, and it is unfortunate that there is not more of it here."

Wool Beach Capes Coming In.

The rubberized beach capes that have been used with bathing costumes will give way this season to capes of wool jersey, according to a maker of these garments. The rubber cape was good looking, but it is contended that if one was worn, the bathing suit never got a real chance to dry. Not only are the wool jersey capes in question color fast, but they come in very handy for wear on days when the sea breeze has a "nip" in it.

BUYING FROM WHOLESALERS

Method Adopted by a Chicago Firm to Put a Check on It.

Persons who go to wholesale houses and try to buy merchandise for themselves on the pretext that they were sent there by a certain retailer would soon change their tactics if the wholesale trade generally adopted the check on this kind of thing that has been put into effect by a Chicago millinery house. This concern is Edson Keith & Co., and a reproduction of the form they use is given below. The left side of the form reads in this way:

Chicago.....

(None of retailer addressed filled in here)

A selection of merchandise has been made from our stock by.....

with the request that we deliver the goods here.

We desire to protect our customers against a sale direct to the consumer and will not deliver unless so ordered by you.

Should you desire that we deliver the goods selected, please sign the attached order and return to us. Yours very truly,

EDSON KEITH & CO.

The above section of the form checks the consumer-customer up. The retailer must know of the visit to the wholesale house, and authorize the sale, or the goods wanted will not be sold. The portion of the form shown below is for the retailer to sign if he wants the person in question to get the goods:

Messrs. EDSON KEITH & CO.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sirs:

We authorize you to deliver goods selected by .....

amounting to $..... and request that you charge this amount to ..... account.

.....

It is suggested by retail millinery trade authorities that the general adoption of a form of this kind would do away with much of the present complaint that many wholesalers are reducing the business of the retailers by selling direct to the ultimate purchasers.

DEALINGS IN BROAD SILKS.

Buying Seems to Have Been Stimulated by Price Advances.

Active buying in the face of advancing prices has featured the local market for broad silks during the week just ended. Increases of from 5 to 15 per cent. have been put into effect on various weaves by most of the large sellers in this city and elsewhere, and further increases seem likely later on, it is said, when the mills have worked off their present raw stocks.

Buyers are reported to be coming to market in droves for Fall supplies. Higher prices seem rather to have stimulated buying than to have curtailed business, as many had feared. It remains to be seen how the purchasing public takes to the new prices, but it is thought that as yet advances have not been large enough to make any very great difference in general trade. There are quite a few mills reported to be booked up to capacity for the next few months, and some for even longer periods.

Satins are said to continue in the centre of the stage for Fall. From the cheapest to the most expensive they are actively sought, though most business seems to be in the medium and better grades. Taffetas are also selling freely, and a number of heavy novelty weaves are in good demand. Among the sheer fabrics, georgette seems to be taking the lead. In colors, the general tendency for Fall is said to be toward the darker and more subdued shades, though as yet this trend is not very pronounced.

NEWEST IN MILLINERY.

Among Them a New Turban and Accordion Pleating Hats.

Very new is the "war bride" turban that is now being shown by some of the local millinery jobbers, according to the bulletin of the Retail Millinery Association of America. This turban is round and is made of Georgette or taffeta, either draped or tightly fitted. A long chiffon or Georgette veil with a hemstitched edge is draped over this turban and hangs down the back. These hats are displayed in solid navy, solid white, or navy combined with white, and are suitable for motoring as well as street wear.

Many well-dressed local women, the bulletin goes on, are now wearing hats made entirely of accordion pleating. While in some cases the entire hat is made of this, others have only the brim or crown made of it. The materials used for this purpose are Georgette, taffeta, and faille silk. The pleating lends a very soft and "smart" touch to the hat.

The bulletin also tells of attractive sport hats that are seen here. These are hats with facing of Java straw, and the entire brim and crown made of narrow grosgrain ribbon. These hats have sold best in white, though there has also been a demand for navy, Copenhagen, green, and purple.

FABRICS AFTER THE WAR.

English Clothmaker Thinks Fancy Ones Will Be in Demand.

A prominent cloth manufacturer of Bradford, England, addressing a recent meeting of the Bradford Textile Society on "Fashions and Textile Fabrics," stated that he believed very soon after the war there would be a complete change in fabric styles and that fancy fabrics would be the most in demand. According to Consul A. E. Ingram of Bradford, the speaker said that as soon as France could turn them out goods made from single twist, dry spun worsted yarns were certain to have a big sale, and he urged Bradford manufacturers to take up the problem of their production. He also advised those having jacquard and box looms not to scrap them for plain looms, saying they would be very much needed when peace comes.

"After the war is over," continued the speaker, "there will be a very busy time in the textile trade of the world, with Germany, Japan, and the United States probably Great Britain's chief competitors. France will exhibit great powers of recovery because she will have absolutely new plants and the most modern machinery."

BUSINESS NOTES.

C. S. Logan, formerly manager of the local office of the Fowler, Dick & Walker syndicate stores, and Miss F. A. Altschuler, formerly a garment buyer for the local Gimbel Brothers store, have joined the ready-to-wear department staff of Jay & Co., resident buyers, 404 Fourth Avenue.

As of May 8, the Government of the Dutch East Indies has prohibited the exportation of sugar, tobacco, pepper, tea, coffee, copra, petroleum, vegetable oils, hides and skins, except under license. A report to this effect has been made by Consul General Fuller, who is at Batavia, Java.

FALL COATS AND SUITS.

Little Novelty Shown in Models at the Initial Openings.

The buyers who attended the initial Fall openings of local manufacturers of cloaks and suits were disappointed in finding so little novelty and originality in the new season's models. This assertion is made on the authority of the official organ of the National Garment Retailers' Association.

"The coats for Fall," it says, "are regulation 48-inch length, and they are varied only slightly by different arrangements of the pockets or buttons. Suits that have been shown are about the same as those designed for Spring wear. Navy blue predominates from necessity rather than choice, for the manufacturers are glad to use up the materials which they had in stock, fearing for future supplies from the mills. Jackets are the customary length. In fact, the buyer might as well have stayed home and re-ordered the same kind of suits as in the Spring, specifying merely that certain little changes be made in placing the pockets and buttons."

Potash Production in Chile.

It is estimated by a Chilean engineer that upward of 300,000 tons of potash could be recovered yearly from refined nitrate and from the nitrate of soda exports from Chile if a proper method of extracting potash from the nitrate were employed. According to Consul General L. J. Kenna in Valparaiso, this engineer found after extensive experimentation that the nitrate deposits in the north of Chile contained an average of 1.73 per cent. of available potash.

Alcohol from Sotol Plant.

Alcohol is being produced in Mexico from a plant called sotol, which grows abundantly in northern Mexico and western Texas, according to a dispatch from Consul Edward A. Dow in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico. It is said that the plant can be gathered at a cost of from $2 to $5 a ton, and that one ton produces from eighteen to twenty-five gallons of 180 proof alcohol.

Guayule Export Duties Reduced.

The Mexican export duties on green guayule are to be reduced from 6 to 3 per cent. ad valorem, based on New York prices, and the duties on guayule rubber will be reduced from 4 to 2 per cent. ad valorem, according to a telegram from the American Consul General in Mexico City. It has not yet been announced when the new duties will go into effect.

CUTTING DOWN SORTS.

Enameled Ware Makers to Reduce Their Output in This Way.

It is stated that the manufacturers of enameled ware will largely meet the request of the Government to reduce their output by cutting down their assortments. This will be done by dropping entirely slow-selling lines and articles for which there is but little call, and which cater more to the whims and fancies of consumers than to their actual needs. They will also eliminate many useless sizes in the better selling lines, for instance, that are so near each other in actual measurement that one size may readily answer for the two which are now made.

Another effective method is that of reducing the various styles of articles which practically answer the same purpose, and which differ only in some detail that has no relation to its actual use. There are, for instance, an infinite variety of covered buckets and dinner buckets, both as to styles and sizes, and this assortment can be greatly curtailed and still have enough for every practical purpose. This cutting down of assortments will reduce the output by making the ultimate consumer use one article for the purpose for which he now uses two when one answers every purpose.

—Carrying Open Accounts —A Banking Function

Your Profit is in merchandising —not in Banking.

Carrying your customers' open Accounts, or Acceptances, deprives your business of that much money, upon which you should make another profit.

Our plan provides for the continued financing of your customers' Accounts FROM TIME OF SHIPMENT UNTIL PAID, whether the Accounts are closed into Acceptances or not.

We purchase your active open Accounts at time of shipment (without disturbing your customers) and give you the cash while you are waiting for Acceptances, which in many cases you may not be able to obtain.

As Banks purchase Acceptances and we purchase Accounts, why not sell us your Accounts? If you receive Acceptances closing same, you have the option to take up such Accounts with us and discount the Acceptances with your Bank—and thus reduce the cost, or we will automatically carry such Acceptances.

SWINBURNE'S HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED POEMS

A Posthumous Collection Ranging Over the Poet's Whole Career and Reminiscent of His Best as Well as His Poorest Work

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

POSTHUMOUS POEMS BY ALGERNON CHARLES SWINBURNE. Edited by Edmund Gosse, C. B., and Thomas James Wise. New York: John Lane Company. $1.50.

SUCH posthumous gleanings from a once riotously overflowing harvest field as this Swinburnian sheaf bound together by Messrs. Gosse and Wise are usually disappointing and saddening. Either they expose the poet in the pitiful decay of his faculty, and are thus of the nature of an uncomfortable memento mori, or they bring together from old scrapbooks and long unopened desks pages of uninspired experiment cast aside and forgotten by the poet himself, the mere scantlings or shavings of his workshop. In the main, this volume does both these things, though it must be said at once that, though it adds nothing of value to the already large bulk of Swinburne's work, it does no disservice to his fame. From the point of view of the critic and the collector, it will, doubtless, have an illustrative value, covering as it does, according to Mr. Gosse's preface, the whole range of Swinburne's career, the earliest poem having been written in 1857, and the latest in 1907. During Swinburne's own life he published volumes which were animated neither more nor less by his own peculiar and splendid afflatus than this in which he has had no say, but in which, I repeat, he is done no wrong. Indeed, after "Tristram of Lyonesse"—with the possible exception of "A Century of Roundels," and an occasional ode touched here or there, like the Autumn woods, with the finger of the old fire—he published nothing one easily remembers. Even his prose distressingly deteriorated, and the decay of his powers, or perhaps one should say of the quality of his powers, (for he was active minded and voluble to the last,) came early and suddenly. Unofficial opinion in London used half-humorously to attribute it to a change in the poet's residence and a corresponding change in his manner of living; in other words, to Putney and Theodore Watts-Dunton, that good friend with whom he lived in brotherly love for so many years, and who, it was suggested, had transfixed the flourish set on Swinburne's flaming youth by the prescription of a regimen of respectability and regular hours, which, however good for the poet's health, was sadly unprovocative of poetry—of poetry, that is, such as the poet had written before he saw Putney. Poetry, indeed, continued to be produced in large quantities, but the new compared with the old was as moonlight unto sunlight, and, particularly, as water unto wine. The pre-Putney (and pre-Raphaelite) days of "Atalanta in Calydon" and "The Triumph of Time" were gone forever.

In the most vivid and ringing lines in the present volume, entitled "Recollections," written in 1878, and intended as a dedication to William Bell Scott, we see the poor, tamed, and domesticated singer straining at the leash, so to say, with wistful eyes on the spacious days of his pre-Putney past:

> Years have sped from us under the sun
> Through blossom and snow-tides twenty-one,
> Since first your hand as a friend's was mine,
> In a season whose days are yet honey and wine.
> To the pale close lips of Remembrance, shed
> By the cupbearer Love for desire of the dead:
> And the weeds I send you may half seem flowers
> In eyes that were lit by the light of its hours.
> For the life (if st all there be life) in them grew
> From the sun then risen on a young day's dew,
> Whenever in August holiday times
> I rode or swam through a rapture of rhymes,
> Over heather and crag, and by scaur and by stream,
> Clothed with delight by the might of a dream,
> With the sweet sharp wind blown hard through my hair,
> On eyes enkindled and head made bare,
> Reining my rhymes in royal order
> Through honied leagues of the northland border;
> Or loosened a song to seal for me
> A kiss on the clamorous mouth of the sea.

Pretty well every mode of Swinburne's muse, every string of his lyre, is represented in this volume, with the exception of the passionate eroticism of "Poems and Ballads"; but, represented, one is obliged to say, with nothing of the magic that fascinates and carries us away in the great unforgettable examples of the master's art. The swaying, sonorous meters are here, the gorgeous vesture, the familiar reiterated imagery, the familiar themes; but, as too often in volumes published in the poet's lifetime, it is a case of vox et praeteria nihil, melodious sound and fury signifying next to nothing. Swinburne once published a volume of parodies, including one of himself—the "Heptalogia, or the Seven Against Sense"—an example of that painful sort of humor in which men entirely devoid of humor sometimes mistakenly indulge, and none more fearfully and wonderfully than he.

A parody of himself is included in the present volume under the title of "The Ghost of It," of which this is the first verse:

> In my poems, with ravishing rapture,
> Storm strikes me, and strokes me, and stings;
> But I'm scarcely the bird you might capture
> Out of doors in the thick of such things.
> I prefer to be well out of harm's way
> When tempest makes tremble the tree,
> And the wind with armipotent arm-sway
> Makes soap of the sea.

A parody to be good must be amusing, but this, alas! while it can surely make no one laugh, must make the judicious grieve, and, while it evidences that Swinburne had an eye upon his own mannerisms, there was really no need for him thus to go out of his way; for, over and over again, poems which he offered as serious utterances to his readers were little more than wearisome travesties of his inspired numbers.

Pater's famous dictum that poetry is always trying to escape into the conditions of music finds in Swinburne's poetry not merely much successful illustration, but, even more, perhaps the limit of its application. No poet so much as Swinburne, with all his acknowledged mastery of verbal music, proves so conclusively that poetry, being after all a literary art, cannot live entirely by sound, but that even its very music depends on a substratum, however slight, of meaning. Here is a sonnet, entitled "New Year's Eve, 1889," which, that the reader may have some clue to its occasion, I cannot say its meaning, I may say was written apropos Robert Browning's funeral in Westminster Abbey:

> All the west, whereon the sunset sealed the dead year's glorious grave
> Fast with seals of light and fire and cloud that light and fire illume,
> Glows at heart and kindles earth and heaven with joyous blush and bloom
> Warm and wide as life, and glad of death which only stays to save.
> As a tide-reconquered sea rock lies aflush with the influent wave,
> Lies the light aflush with darkness, lapped about with lustrous gloom,
> Even as life with death, and time with fame, and memory with the tomb,
> Where a dead man hath for vassals Fame the serf and Time the slave.
> Far from earth as heaven, the steadfast light withdrawn, superb, suspense,
> Burns in dumb divine expansion of illimitable flower:
> Moonrise whets the shadows' edges keen as noontide: hence and thence > Glows the presence from us passing, shines and passes not the power.
> Souls arise whose word remembered is as spirit with the sense:
> All the hours are theirs of all the seasons: death hath but his hour.

Was ever a great man so cryptically honored? Or did fourteen lines ever travail with such a phantasmagoric welter of meaningless words and images? Here is absolutely no meaning, and nothing but a mockery of music.

Again, how familiar is the vapid sonority of lines such as these:

> Lord, is it daytime or night?
> Failure, Lord, or success?
> Speak to us, answer us, Thou:
> Surely the light of Thy brow
> Gave us, giveth us, light,
> Dark be the season or bright,
> Strong to support or suppress.
> All the noise of the night,
> All the thunder of things . . .

and so on.

Or again this of "Æolus":

> Lord of days and nights that hear Thy word of wintry warning,
> Wind, whose feet are set on ways that none may tread,
> Change the nest wherein thy wings are fledged for flight by morning,
> Change the harbour whence at dawn thy sails are spread—and thus for five pages, ending at last with the familiar "foam that laughs and leaps along the sea."

I make these quotations, it need scarcely be said, in no disparagement of that noble genius which has long since outsoared the shadow of all criticism, but merely by way of illustration of its singular working. All great poets display more or less the defects of their qualities, and a selection, which would certainly be novel, and in some cases hulky, could be made from each one of them by which it would be possible to prove that they were not poets at all. But in no other poet so much, I think, as in Swinburne do success and failure lie so close together, are divided as by a mere hair's breadth. The chief value of this posthumous volume lies in its copious illustration of this fact in several directions. Again and again we see the poet employing meters, imagery, decorations, and even thoughts, sacred in our memories by his frequent inspired usage of them, but, for some reason, they refuse to combine into a masterpiece. All the precious components of the sacrifice are on the altar. But the fire falls not from heaven. In other words, a good poem and a bad poem by Swinburne have a curious first-sight resemblance to each other, but the difference between them is very markedly that between vivid life and painted death. It is the difference between the living snake and the mailed and glittering skin, the, at first sight, deceiving simulacrum of itself, shed behind it in the grass.

Perhaps the main defect in Swinburne's poetry, that which accounts for the monotony of some of his more successful work, lies less in the lack of thought, that "fundamental brain power" on which Rossetti insisted as the basis of great poetry, than in the sameness of its imagery. Alike in metaphor and simile Swinburne is strangely limited. Flames and flowers, sunrises and sunsets, fluctuant tides, stars and thunders, winds and rains and snows, snakes that hiss and writhe, light and darkness, trumpets and blown hair and staggering moons: to these he is almost entirely limited for his comparisons throughout his poetry, and some concordance maker might make an interesting count of the number of times these poetical properties are made to do duty in his work. His adjectives, too, particularly his superlatives, are repeated again and again:

> Beside the lordliest grave in all the world—

> The stateliest singing mouth that speaks our tongue—of course, it is Landor's; for in this volume Swinburne's enthusiasms, which are almost as monotonous as his mannerisms, are duly present. How often during his long life was he to write the words "lordliest" and "stateliest," and here, again, in this volume is his enthusiasm for Young Italy and Mazzini, an "Ode" to whom contains an occasional flash of "Songs Before Sunrise"—though it is

THRESHOLD OF QUIET

THE THRESHOLD OF QUIET. By Daniel Corkery. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $1.50.

MR. CORKERY, whose "A Munster Twilight" has won him fame as the portrayer of life in the south of Ireland, speaks of the characters of this latest book as "a handful of wsyfaring souls," gathered together within the covers of his novel. Ths phrase suggests the book; it is less a story than a gathering together of people, and a lifting of the curtain that veils their thoughts and emotions from the outside world. Here is "the threshold of quiet" indeed—this simple life so far removed from ambitions and competitions and the rush of things. Yet here human beings are pondering and suffering and making decisions and efforts and sacrifices; and here as elsewhers human beings are not types, but individuals.

Says the author in his prologue:

> Leaving us, the Summer visitor says in his good-humored way that Cork is quite a busy place, considering how small it is. • • • For him this is Cork. But for us it is only "ths flat of the city." What of the hillsides? Go but three steps up any of those old-time, wide-sweeping, treeless, cloud-shadowed hills and you find yourself even at midday in a silence that grows on you. You have scarce left the city, yet you raise your eyes, you look around and notice littls gable ends that finish in little crosses of stone or arched gatsways of sandstone or limestone or both, or far-stretching garden walls that are marked with tablets of brass on which are cut holy emblems and sacred lstters—and as you look the silence seems to grow deeper and deeper; indeed, you have come on the very fruitage of the spirit of contemplation—convents, monastcries, chapels, hospitals, houses of refuge. And to us these quiet hillsides also are Cork. Perhaps they are the quieter for the noise in the valley; perhaps, too, that little stir and bustls is quickened for those long slopes of quiet sunshine and peace. But both are Cork, hillsides and city marsh.
> Self-knowledge is not easily won; and for me truly to know Cork is almost as difficult. Those faces I have been looking at in its streets today, how much do they know of that "quiet desperation" in which, according to ths American philosopher, most of the eltizens of the world pass their lives? And if they do know something of this quiet desperation, whether it is the stillness of the hills or the busy body chatter of the valley that gives it its local texture and color, its tenderness, its snap, its gentleness, its petulance, its prayer? • • • And once again the handful of wayfaring souls that aro gathered into this story would pass before me, as if they would answer for all!

To that mood, the novel is attuned. It has little plot. Its characters are neighbors, friends, but that is almost all the "connectedness" the story has. Frank Bresnan, the gay and successful young business man, who cried out for help before his strange death; Stevie Galvin of ths excited moods, the sudden sympathies, the roving imagination, who carried so sore a trouble in his heart; Finnbarr, the boy who wanted to do his duty and wanted to go to sea; Lily, the saint; Ned, the simple, outspoken young man who sometimes talked too bluntly; Martin Cloyne, pondering on life—they all live their lives quietly enough, but with a deep personalness that the author makes us feel. There is the imagination, the poetry, the touch of sombreness of the Irish here. Truly, "The Threshold of Quiet" is what its author calls it, a "gathering of souls."

BEFORE THE WIND

BEFORE THE WIND. By Janet Laing. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.50.

STRICTLY speaking, "Before ths Wind" is a war novel. But it has nothing to do with "the front," nor is it a study in wartime psychology. It is a clever, ingenious, somewhat satiric tale of certain happenings in and about a household on the east coast of Scotland during a part of the war. It is a romance, a detective story, a novel that is rich in lightness and amusement without blinking the deeper and sadder things of these hard days. It is a whimsical and most readable tale.

During the first year of the war events have changed Ann Charteris from a careless schoolgirl of 17 to a lonely young woman, who must make her own living, and has no special fitness for anything that demands training. Happily, she has sweetness, unselfishness, strength, adaptahility; when a position offers itself as companion to two rich and lovable, though somewhat eccentric, old ladies in Scotland, Ann is able to make herself invaluable to them. It is the result of her sincerity and seriousness, her deep sense of the reality of the war in which her only brother has died, that the Misses Barton of Bartonsmuir open their house to the Wrack-Straws.

The Wrack-Straws are the useless people who, with large retinues of servants, are keeping women and sometimes men from valuable service to their country; they do

ISABEL knew—Isabel whose husband had been taken away from her, and for whom she was always waiting. They said it had affected her mind—but she knew what the little girl was escaping.

Biddy knew—the quaint old Irish serving woman—and perhaps she helped a little when she told about one thing Sir Eustace had done. And Greatheart knew—but he would not tell her, because he loved her himself, and she was his brother's promised wife.

How the girl gets out of it all—and how she learned the real name for the man they called Stumpy—makes one of the most fascinating of Ethel Dell's fine books.

Gone to Earth

By Mary Webb,
author of "The Golden Arrow," "The Spring of Joy."

About what novel of recent days—or years—could the Literary Editor of a newspaper of the standing of The Sun (New York) say (in a review covering a whole page):

Rebecca West's Verdict—"Let us recall what Miss West said about it: 'The year's discovery has been Mary Webb, author of GONE TO EARTH. She is a genius and I shouldn't mind wagering that she is going to be the most distinguished writer of our generation.'"

The Impressiveness of GONE TO EARTH—"GONE TO EARTH is the most impressive English novel since Thomas Hardy gave us Tess of the D'Urbervilles. It has many points of resemblance to Tess."

The Author's High Literary Lineage—"Mary Webb is of the line of Meredith. In GONE TO EARTH are many Meredithean traits of style, but the fantasticalness which Meredith allowed himself is not present."

The Characters of the Story—"They are put before us with exquisite and unobtrusive humor and understanding. There is fun in this book; make no mistake about that. There is comprehension, which is of far more importance; and there is the power to convey, which is most important of all."

The Author's Literary Immortality—"GONE TO EARTH will be read, it will be remembered. Its author is assured of something more than mere notice hereafter."

THIS IS AN APPLETON BOOK D. APPLETON & CO. Publishers, New York

NOTABLE BOOKS IN BRIEF REVIEW

THE WAR AND AFTER: Short Chapters on Subjects of Serious, Practical Import for the Average Citizen from A. D. 1915 Onwards. By Sir Oliver Lodge. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

DURING recent years the great achievements and fame of Sir Oliver Lodge in the realm of science have been somewhat obscured for most people by his errant investigations of occult matters. It has really seemed as if he were in a fair way to become better known as a spiritualist than as a scientist. But in this book he makes his appearance in a rôle very different from either of these and writes as a man of profound and wide learning whose mind and heart and soul have been enriched, uplifted and directed by the inner significance rather than the outward form of his search for the spiritual message of the universe. The result is a book of immediate practical value and possible service that deserves the widest reading. He has busied himself, bringing to the task wide reading, deep thought, and the method of a mind thoroughly trained in science, with the endeavor to find the deep-lying causes of the war in racial spirit, national purpose, and molding and guiding philosophy, to make clear its significance as shown by its character, and to point out the lessons which should be learned by England, and presumably by her allies, from the causes of the struggle and from the conflict itself.

Thus it will be seen that, true scientist as he is, he has gone straight to the source of the conflict and has discerned that—what is in much danger of being forgotten—it is the spirit of a nation that guides its course, that makes it a factor for good or for evil in the progress of humanity. And the ultimate source of the world war he traces to the philosophy that has been the inspiration of German life, the growth, the development, the purposes of Germany. Of the philosophy of a people as its directing force he says:

> The fact is that Philosophy has a much more effective influence on conduct than in England is generally supposed. It may not be known by that name; people may imagine that they have no particular philosophy of life; but practically they have, and unless they are mere drifting casuals they cannot avoid having one—though its formulation is a subject for professors. And any country in which as a body the educated class loses its independence and becomes subservient to State officialism is in a parlous condition; the blind are then led by those whose eyes are bandaged.

He then goes on through several clearly argued and forcefully stated chapters to show how the conduct of Germany has been molded and directed by a materialistic philosophy which reached its logical consummation in the German methods of Statecraft and warfare. He proves and discusses the revulsion of the German people toward materialism and away from Christianity, idealism, and acceptance of moral law. He points out in an especially illuminating chapter in what respects the war is a conflict between ideals, not merely ideals of government, but the primary ideals of life, and sets forth at some length the fact that the two errors, or mistaken theories, that are now supreme in Germany—the glorification of war based on a misreading of Darwinism and the enthronement of mere power, material force, with its consequent belief in the unmoral supremacy of the State—are the outcome of the philosophy that has permeated the entire nation.

In the last section, which fills more than a third of the book, Sir Oliver considers hopefully the beneficent results to mankind which ought to result from the war, from the awakened minds and stirred souls of the nations. "The earth," he says, "might be so fine a habitation for an ennobled human race." So he pleads that we begin to think about how to utilize the truths that are dawning upon us and prepare to make the world a better abiding place for the clearer seeing, keener thinking, and more nobly acting race he hopes humanity will be after the war. He discusses the reforms in industrial conditions, education, society, and politics which would help to bring true his hopes, and in a very earnest but temperate manner urges that people begin to think already about these things.

The book is an unusual combination of rare insight and sound practical purpose, and, although it was written three years ago for the special reading of the British people, its principles are as sound now and as urgent for American readers as they were then for the British. It is to be regretted that Sir Oliver did not see more clearly and certainly to how great an extent the corruption of all the world by materialistic philosophy had aided in the ripening of Germanic ambitions and so made well-nigh all the peoples of the earth in part responsible for the calamity that has come upon the whole world. Now and then he has glimpses of this stern truth but nowhere does he bring it out strongly.

HEARTS OF CONTROVERSY

HEARTS OF CONTROVERSY. By Alice Meynell. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons.

ALICE MEYNELL is known as a poet of some distinction, chiefly because of the simplicity of her manner and the beauty of her thought, as an essayist who, while frequently dallying with preciosity, nevertheless has often a clear and vigorous challenge in her thinking, and as a critic of pronounced convictions able to set forth forcefully and interestingly the reasons for her opinions. Literary criticism busies her pen in the half dozen articles that make up this new volume. It is controversial criticism and deals with literary reputations that have been the theme of endless discussion for many a year. In an introduction of a dozen lines she announces her purpose and her belief with a stanch conviction that foreshadows her attitude in the following pages. "We must study," she says, "other men's inventions in our closet, but need we print our comments on them? Exposition, interpretation, by themselves are not necessary. But for controversy there is cause."

And so with a high heart and a sure mind she sets out for her controversies on those "hearts" of disagreement and discussion over which have waged so many battles—Tennyson and Dickens and Swinburne and the Brontës and certain eighteenth-century characteristics. She is positive in her opinions, but so much good taste and sound sense, so much of that ever-to-be-praised desire for the best, so much knowledge of men and women and books and so much keen thinking about them and love of them have gone into the forming of her opinions that she is justified in holding them positively. And no one who loves either or all of the authors about whom she writes can fail to find her pages interesting and stimulating. Her discussion of each of her subjects is discriminating and just, and only the blindest worshipper at their shrines could object to her insistence upon the recognition of the faults and weaknesses she points out in all of them. And her pleasure in their fine and great and noble qualities is enough to soothe the wounded heart of any such worshipper.

It is always a pleasure to read Mrs. Meynell's prose, even when, as sometimes happens, her web of thought is unduly diaphanous. And when, as here, she has constantly something worth while to say, her ability to say it so well, with such vigor and beauty, such clear-cut precision and such graphic phrasing, doubles the interest and the pleasure with which one reads her pages.

USE YOUR GOVERNMENT

USE YOUR GOVERNMENT: What Your Government Does for You. By Alissa Franc. Illustrated. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $2.

IT was left for a newcomer to America to undertake an important and valuable service which, once it is done, every one can see ought to have been done long ago. But, on the same principle perhaps that those who live within daily view of great scenes think little about them, we Americans have gone about our daily affairs and learned and been enthusiastic about the activities of other Governments while we knew little and thought less about what our own democratic Government has been doing in the development of co-operation with its individual citizens. But Miss Franc, who came to the United States for the first time three years ago, was at once impressed by the variety, magnitude, and importance of the work which our Government does for the benefit of its people. She was equally impressed also by the ignorance of most people concerning it. And she was filled with the desire to tell the American people what a wonderfully helpful system of service their democratic Commonwealth has evolved and to do it in a way that would be of service to the nations of Europe when, once the war is over, they begin their remaking of themselves.

So, she has written the book, the very first book that has ever been written which gathers together and sets forth the many beneficent activities of the United States Government in the service of the men, women, and children who form its citizenship. Under the sub-title, "What Your Government Does for You," comes this explanation of the last word: "You means man of business, farmer, exporter, home maker, school boy, or school girl. In some way the Government helps each one of you. This book tells you how. The Government needs your help. You cannot give it unless you know how the Government operates. This book tells you how."

In eight sections Miss Franc takes up, seriatim, what the Government does for the benefit of the farmer, the would-be settler, the man in business, the working man, the immigrant, the negro, the woman in her home, girls, and boys. With an admirably clear and concise treatment and logical arrangement she narrates just what kind of co-operation the Government offers to each of these classes for the furtherance of their interests and how the farmer, the business man, the workingman, the housewife, or any other of them can avail themselves of that assistance. She tells, to instance only a few of the topics covered by the book, about the fostering and improving of live stock, the public health service, the farm labor problem, rural organization of marketing, courses of reading for parents, methods of assisting the business man, the special work done for various industries, community organization, Americanization of immigrants, assistance given to the negro, investigations and advice concerning problems of the home. The book is wholly practical, concerned only with the statement of facts in the fewest possible words. There are cross-references to guide the reader, and in every way the volume has been made one for easy reference and useful service.

It will be especially useful in public libraries and in those connected with educational institutions. But, of invaluable service

IN THE WAR FOR DEMOCRACY

FRONTIERS OF FREEDOM. By Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War. New York: George H. Doran Company. $1.50.

THE AMERICAN SPIRIT: Addresses in Wartime. By Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. 75 cents.

NO good American, of whatever party, or section, or racial inheritance, can read these two books without rejoicing that men so representative of the best in America, of America's finest vision and highest ideals and most forceful and practical spirit, have a part in the guidance of the country at this crisis, that they are where the stamp of their own profoundly American character can impress itself upon the day by day development of affairs. In entire accord with the spirit and purpose of President Wilson in his determination that this war shall be for the advancing and safeguarding of democracy, the two books show, at least in regard to these two important advisers, how sure has been his judgment in the selection of his official family. Both books are compilations of speeches delivered more or less recently, and therefore some part at least of each has been reported in the newspapers. But here for the first time they are fully and adequately presented and in each volume there are so many fine things so well said, with such forcefulness and vision, so quick with the spirit of American ideals, hopes and purposes, that their preservation in permanent form is a distinct public service.

The addresses in the volume by Secretary Baker have all been delivered during the last year and cover a wide variety of places and occasions, from a speech to a gathering of college Presidents in Washington to brief talks to our soldiers in France. But they are all concerned in one way or another with the mounting purpose of America to throw herself with the full weight of all her resources and all her people and all her traditional purpose and spirit into the war for democracy. Therefore, one finds in the speeches, inevitably, more or less repetition of theme or idea or phraseology. But there is, after all, very little repetition, so little, indeed, that one wonders at the rich variety of his mental furniture as he addresses these varying groups of fellow-citizens and appeals to the peculiar interests of each, seeing behind it the hosts for which it stands and interpreting for it and for them, in terms of their own relation to the nation and the war, the ideals for which America is fighting. Among these occasions upon which the addresses were made were a conference of trade publication editors, the first national community Song Day, a war-camp recreation conference, a convention of police chiefs, a Liberty Loan meeting, a mass meeting at Cleveland, Ohio; and there are also speeches that were delivered before an engineering society, an officers' training camp, the woman suffrage association, the New York Southern Society, and others just as varied. Among the most important at the moment is the full report of the long address—it fills almost a hundred pages—before the Senate Military Affairs Committee on Jan. 28, in which he gave account of "What We Have Done to Make War." The preservation in full of this most interesting document alone makes the book well worth while and deserving of the attention of all for whom the war has meaning.

It is sometimes said, as against Secretary Baker's fitness for his position, that he is an idealist—those who say it perhaps forgetting that it is just as well for both fighter and director of fighting to keep in mind what we are fighting for. The quality of his idealism, its far sighted vision and its intense Americanism, are manifest in every page of this book. But there is something else that is manifest also, that will perhaps surprise those who hold superficial and heedless estimates of his character. And that is his thorough-going practical quality. One finds it everywhere in the book, in his knowledge of human nature, in his insight into character, in his rapid seizing of means, in his recognition of conditions, in his flexible fitting of occasions and methods to purposes. And there is everywhere such perfect faith in the principles and the purposes of American democracy and in the hearts and souls and thoughts of the American people that the book ought to be an inspiration for those possessing less knowledge of the country and less faith in its people.

There is so much of literary quality in Mr. Baker's addresses, so much of happy phrasing and striking expression of ideas, that the pages of the book fairly cry out for quotation. But space will permit only the gathering of a sentence here and there. For instance: "I am not asking you to forbear criticism. A declaration of war is always a declaration of an open season for critics, and that is rather fortunate." "The army is merely the point of the sword. It is simply the striking point of the national strength, but the handle and the hand that wields the handle, and the body that controls that hand, and the subsistence of that body are all just as vital and indispensable to the effective use of that weapon as the point itself." "We have learned that the best control in the world is self-control, and that the best inducement to self-control is the kind of education that gives the best that is in men normally opportunity to grow vigorous."

Secretary Lane's little book contains thirteen addresses, nearly all of them brief, delivered on a variety of occasions during the last six years. The volume takes its title from the theme of the initial address which was delivered at the commencement exercises of Brown University two years ago. Surveying the things America has done, and aspired to do, he found the personification in two men of the American spirit, Theodore Judah, the young Connecticut engineer, who was the real builder of the first transcontinental railroad, and Herbert Hoover, and phrased his idea thus: "Judah—the incarnation of the American ambition to make hard places easy; Hoover—the incarnation of the American desire to help the world." In all the addresses the chief theme is this exposition of the spirit which has made America in the past and must continue its molding powers in the future. But the exposition is not in the spirit or the form of boastfulness or national egotism. Its keynote is rather that of urgent appeal to his hearers, to all Americans, to be worthy of that spirit, to hold it before them as guide and standard, to make their lives individually and their part in the national life a force to hold America true to the American spirit. Throughout, his exposition is fine and noble and inspiring. One is at first moved to say that the book for that reason should be widely read by the young, to help them start their lives facing the right way; and then one remembers how many a man of middle age needs just the rectification of his point of view that the inspiration of the book would give, and then it seems better to put the emphasis quite as much on the older as the younger readers.

There is one brief address, filling less than four pages, called "Makers of the Flag," delivered before the employes of the Department of the Interior on Flag Day, 1914, that deserves a place among the classics of American literature. For with imagination and insight and literary grace and charm it interprets in brief and telling sentences what the American flag ought to mean to every man, woman, and child who lives under it. A few sentences will prove its quality and show with what beauty Secretary Lane has expressed a great truth. The flag itself is speaking: "I am not the flag; not at all. I am but its shadow. I am whatever you make me, nothing more. I am your belief in yourself, your dream of what a People may become. Sometimes I am strong with pride, when men do an honest work, fitting the rails together truly. Sometimes I am loud, garish, and full of that ego that blasts judgment. But always I am all that you hope to be and have the courage to try for. I am the day's work of the weakest man and the largest dream of the most daring. I swing before your eyes as a bright gleam of color, a symbol of yourself, the pictured suggestion of that big thing which makes this nation. My stars and my stripes are your dream and your labors. They are bright with cheer, brilliant with courage, firm with faith, because you have made them so out of your hearts. For you are the makers of the flag, and it is well that you glory in the making."

Secretary Baker and Secretary Lane are representative American men and the material of their addresses shows that they are speaking from their hearts, out of intimate knowledge of the American people, voicing the understanding and the desires of that people. And that is why their books are so extraordinarily stirring and inspiring—because through their pages the American people is speaking its warmest heart and its noblest soul.

IN BRITISH GUIANA

TROPICAL WILD LIFE IN BRITISH GUIANA. Zoological Contributions from the Tropical Research Station of the New York Zoological Society. By William Beebe, Directing Curator; G. Inness Hartley, Research Associate, and Paul G. Howes, Research Assistant. With an introduction by Colonel Theodore Roosevelt. Photographs and other illustrations by the authors. Vol. I. New York: New York Zoological Society. $3.

This volume, entitled "Tropical Wild Life in British Guiana," contains important zoological contributions from the Tropical Research Station of the New York Zoological Society; it is published by the Zoological Society as the first of a series of books in which students of natural history and the general reader will find accounts of what the society's agents learn at its research station.

The contributions now set before the public come from William Beebe, Directing Curator of the station; G. Inness Hartley, his research associate, and Paul G. Howes, his research assistant; they tell of studies carried on in British Guiana during six months of the year 1916. Mr. Beebe's communication contains a vivid and concise delineation of what he calls "the grosser, more apparent characteristics of the region under study" in order to form a background for intensive concrete investigations made last year and for those that may be made later on. Mr. Hartley's researches were concerned chiefly with the gathering of ornithological data and with problems of embryology; Mr. Howes confined his work to entomology. The illustrations in the book, numbering near 150, reproduce photographs taken by Mr. Beebe and Mr. Howes.

A warm commendation of the Zoological Society's British Guiana enterprise appears in a foreword to the volume written by Colonel Roosevelt; the Colonel says the society is doing a wholly new type of biological work, the very sort of work that should be done in order that an adequate revelation be made of tropical wild life. Generous praise is also bestowed in the foreword upon Mr. Beebe and his associates; Colonel Roosevelt thinks the Zoological Society chose its agents with admirable appreciation of their qualifications for the work they were to perform.

The Statue in the Wood
By Richard Pryce

The New York Times says:

"THE novels of Richard Pryce are not so well known in this country as they deserve to be. Whoever takes pleasure in a sure and capable craftsmanship in fiction, a delicate touch, a keen and penetrating insight into the subtleties of human nature, and a permeating sense of beauty, should hasten to make acquaintance with his novels. And they could not have a better example than this new story, which, of all his seven books that have been published in the United States, perhaps best exemplifies the peculiar delicacy and charm of his art and the vigor and individuality of his style."

And the Meaning of Her Life for Americans

By C. M. STEVENS

One of the most fascinating and enthralling of all the tragedies of history is brought particularly to mind now by the encampment of American troops near Domremy, the birthplace of the wonderful Maid of France. The author has in this new book interpreted her life as a human document showing her to be, in truth, "the Goddess of Liberty for the Democracy of the World."

"After the war there will be such comradeship of nations as the world has never known. Somehow this book makes it very plain. It is a solution of the present terrible riddle of a world at arms."

Beyond Architecture

By A. Kingsley Porter of Yale University
Author of "Mediæval Architecture," "Lombard Architecture," etc.

Mr. Porter treats of broad principles applicable not only to architecture, but also to the other arts, painting and sculpture, even music and literature. He demonstrates that beyond architecture as eternal principles of beauty lie significance and content.

It is only in modern times that art has set itself no higher goal than art itself, and this abandonment of an ulterior idea has led to precipitate decline. Hope for the future of American Art, the author concludes, lies in a return to intellectuality. This is a revolutionary contribution to criticism which an architect, artist or person interested in art can afford not to read.

though it will be in teaching the young and the newcomer just what a co-operative, beneficent Government they are living under, the ordinary reader, even the well-informed one, will find his outlook widened and his knowledge increased as he learns, with surprise, how many and varied are the activities for his benefit in which the Government engages. Especially is this true of the vast work that has been in very recent years developed for the benefit of the agricultural interests of the country. This section fills nearly half the book and deserves to be read by every man and woman claiming or desiring to be an American citizen. Miss Franc well says in her prefatory note: "To most of us perhaps the Government seems to consist of a body of men wasting an undue amount of time and therefore money in the making of laws—some good, some bad, some indifferent." Her book will show all who read it that, even if that view of our Government is sometimes true, it also functions in other and more beneficent ways.

There is a commendatory introduction by Adelaide Hasse, Chief of the Economic Division, New York Public Library, who praises the work for its immediate usefulness in America and its possible service for our allies after the war. It is copiously and interestingly illustrated from photographs picturing some of the work explained in the text.

VOTING MANUALS

THE WOMAN VOTER'S MANUAL. By S. E. Forman and Marjorie Shuler. With an introduction by Carrie Chapman Catt. New York: The Century Company. $1.

YOUR VOTE AND HOW TO USE IT. By Mrs. Raymond Brown. With a foreword by Carrie Chapman Catt. New York: Harper & Brothers. 75 cents.

THE A B C OF VOTING. By Marion B. Cothren. With an Introduction by Honorable Charles S. Whitman. New York: The Century Company. 60 cents.

THESE little manuals of civics are addressed specially to the woman voter. Two of them deal particularly with the concerns of this State, for the special enlightenment of the newly enfranchised women here. Yet it is obvious that such books are not of interest to women alone, and that there are many men, veterans perhaps of years experience at the polls, who may profitably study American civil government! These are books of information for voters.

"The Woman Voter's Manual" is the most general of the three. It discusses popular government, the rights and responsibilities of citizenship, and then goes on to define the organization and duties of Congress, of the Cabinet, of the Federal departments, and of the courts, Federal and State. After these chapters upon national Government come explanations of State matters—the legislature and the executive. Then counties, towns, townships, and municipalities are taken up and a chapter is added upon the territories and dependencies of the United States. The second half of the book deals with party organization, party platforms, international relations, taxation, public finance, money, commerce, and corporations. The Constitution of the United States and a summary of the New York State election laws are added as appendices, and the volume is indexed. The book is an excellent manual for all citizens, simple, informative, and, for a book of such small compass and such wide range, remarkably inclusive.

"Your Vote and How to Use It" is more detailed and specific. It deals almost entirely with the problems of the voter in New York State and the questions that he or she may ask. It has a chapter on national Government, and touches upon national matters, of course. But it is addressed particularly to the voter here, and goes into detail not only in explaining the Government of New York State and City but in discussing economic conditions, public education, the protection of women and children, &c. It is indeed richly informative. The substance of some of the chapters has been used as a correspondence course in citizenship by the New York State Woman Suffrage Party, of which the author is Chairman of Organization.

Marion B. Cothren, who wrote "The A B C of Voting," is a member of the New York bar. Her handbook, like Mrs. Brown's, is addressed especially to the women of New York State. The little manual is brief, succinct, and interesting. In addition to the regular matter of the book there are valuable appendices—maps of New York State showing the Congressional, Senatorial, and Assembly districts, sample enrollment blanks, and primary and election ballots, the naturalization law, the New York political calendar for 1918, and a brief bibliography.

DEDUCTIONS FROM THE WAR

DEDUCTIONS FROM THE WORLD WAR. By Baron von Freytag-Loringhoven, Lieutenant General and Deputy Chief of the German Imperial Staff. New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE American edition of this illuminating volume is commended to the American public for careful study. Its author is the most distinguished soldier-writer of Prussia—which is practically tantamount to saying that he is the most distinguished exponent in present writing of the theory and practice of militarism. His book was written to give information and advice to the German people. It was published during the last weeks of 1917. When German newspapers called attention to the significant candor with which the author outlines Germany's plans in preparing for "the next war," comment upon the book was immediately restricted or completely suppressed; meanwhile its export was prohibited. None the less, a few copies found their way across the frontier, and English and American editions are now available, to show the public here and in Great Britain how Germany feels about war in the future and what plans she proposes to make.

The first part of the volume is largely concerned with the present struggle and is an interesting presentation of the German militarist's point of view. It is in the latter half of the book, however, that the suggestions for the future are made. The author has no faith whatever in a league of nations or any other effort "to enforce peace." He builds only on war. Of the hope of peace upon earth he says:

> We misconstrue reality if we imagine that it is possible to rid the world of war by means of mutual agreements. Such agreements will, in the future, as in the past, be concluded from time to time between States. The further development of international courts of arbitration, and the elimination of many causes of dispute by their agency, lies within the realm of possibility, but any such agreements will, after all, only be treaties which will not on every occasion be capable of holding in check the forces seething within the States. Therefore, the idea of a universal league for the preservation of peace remains a Utopia, and would be felt as an intolerable tutelage by any great and proud-spirited nation. * * * The fact that it was precisely the President of the United States of North America who advocated such a brotherhood of nations must in any case arouse our wonderment. America's behavior in the war has shown that pacifism, as represented in America, is only business pacifism, and so at the bottom nothing else than crass materialism. This truth is not altered by the fact that it is wrapped in a hazy garment of idealism and so seeks to hide its real significance from unsuspecting minds. Nor is the truth altered by the appeal to democratic tendencies, for precisely this war is showing that those who at present hold power in the great democracies have risked in irresponsible fashion the future of the peoples intrusted to their guidance. In any event, as regards us Germans, the world war should disincumber us once and for all of any vague cosmopolitan sentimentality. * * * In the future, as in the past, the German people will have to seek firm cohesion in its glorious army and in its belaureled young fleet.

As to what these are to do, the author has plans made in detail. He urges that while the "manoeuvres" in preparation for future war must take account of trench warfare, that should not be given the predominant place in training. He makes the general suggestion that during the peace which will follow this war, and be used by Germany to get ready for the next one, Germany must devote more attention to tactics on a large scale and less to strategy. He declares that the traditional drill of the German Army "must, in any event, remain the permanent, imperishable foundation of our training," but adds, "We must not carry too far our cult of tradition." He outlines the organization, which must "rest on a sound, aristocratic tradition," of the officers' corps of Germany's future armies. He asserts definitely that the spirit of German militarism must be preserved in the future, because "with it our world position stands or falls." These are only a few of his plans and suggestions; a significant book, indeed!

GRASS IN THE PAVEMENT

THE GRASS IN THE PAVEMENT. By M. E. Buhler. New York: James T. White & Co.

Readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES have often noted the serious thought and fine work in the poems that have occasionally appeared upon its editorial page by M. E. Buhler. These, together with other verses published elsewhere, Miss Buhler has gathered together and they have been published in a handsome little volume whose fine craftsmanship deserves a word of praise. To the book she has given the title of one of the best of her poems which sings the cry to God of the grass growing in the pavement of the city street for better conditions of life, for the fields of its birthright:

> "God," cried the grass in the pavement,
> "Am I not worthy of living,
> Who am green in the waterless places
> And subsist in the clefts of the stone?"
> * * * * * * *
> "Child," came the Voice in the stillness,
> "Know I not well thou art worthy,
> Thou who declarest my glory
> Where death and destruction are rife?
> "Therefore have I set thee in lonely
> And parched and desolate places:
> Are the weakest and least of the legions
> Placed in the van of the strife?
> "Know I not well thou art worthy?
> I have chosen thee ever all others,
> Thou who art potent, unyielding,
> And strong in the fullness of life!"

Always thoughtful, always fascinated by the spiritual mysteries of life and always seeking to find an answer to them, Miss Buhler combines with this serious tone fine poetic feeling, unfailing good taste, and quick human sympathy. She does not wander adventurously in the choice of her poetical medium, but she uses with mastery the few forms of verse which serve her need. There is much beauty, as well as much feeling and thought, in many of the poems.

WITH AUTHORS AND PUBLISHERS

AN illustrated pamphlet carrying the title "Edith Wharton's War Charities in France" has been published by the New York committee which has charge of the interests in America of Mrs. Wharton's work. The pamphlet contains, along with much matter dealing with subscriptions and the uses to which the money was put, half a dozen pages from the pen of Mrs. Wharton herself, which, although they are devoted to the bare recounting of facts, show how different from the usual report such a document can be when it comes from the hand of a gifted writer. She explains the exact present status with reference to the Red Cross of each one of the several war charities she has instituted in France. The report covers the period of the war until the end of 1917, and the figures show that Mrs. Wharton has received and disbursed during that time money amounting to almost half a million dollars. The New York committee, of which Mrs. Cadwalader Jones, 21 East Eleventh Street, New York, is Chairman, will be glad to receive donations of money or clothing for Mrs. Wharton's work among the ill and destitute Belgian and French refugees.

A notable addition to authoritative literature concerning the war will be made by George H. Doran Company in the collected speeches, which they will presently publish, of David Lloyd George since the beginning of the conflict. It will be called "The Great Crusade," and the compilation and arrangement have been made by F. L. Stevenson, who has divided the public addresses of England's great war commoner into three sections, including, respectively, those made while Minister of Munitions, while Secretary of State for War, and since he became Prime Minister.

What promises to be a unique treatment of the personality of the German Kaiser is announced for early publication by G. P. Putnam's Sons. Poultney Bigelow, than whom no American has had a better opportunity to acquire accurate knowledge of that personality, is the author, and its title is "Genseric, King of the Vandals and First Prussian Kaiser." For twenty-five years, beginning with the Franco-Prussian war, Mr. Bigelow enjoyed the close friendship of the present Kaiser, but the association came to an abrupt end with the publication of his work on the "History of the German Struggle for Liberty." It is said that Mr. Bigelow finds in William II. a modern counterpart of the famous Genseric.

France is celebrating today the anniversary of the deliverance of Orleans by Jeanne d'Arc, and Americans can read the story of the French heroine interpreted in terms of American appreciation in a book entitled "The Wonderful Story of Joan of Arc and the Meaning of Her Life for Americans," by C. M. Stevens, which the Cupples & Leon Company, Boston, are publishing at once.

Charles Norris, brother of Frank Norris, whose early death was so great a loss to American literature, has already shown that the gift for writing fiction was not held alone by his elder brother and forerunner, and presently will offer added proof of kinship other than physical in the form of a new novel which E. P. Dutton & Co. have in train for early publication. It will be called "Salt; or, the Education of Griffith Adams," and is said to show not a little of his brother's ability in the writing of vivid realistic pictures of life. The development of the story is said also to carry a merciless criticism of educational theory and practice in the United States. Mr. Norris's wife, Kathleen Norris, has already won a place among the successful authors of American fiction.

Longmans, Green & Co. announce the initiation of a new series of practical scientific books, of English origin, of which they have the American publication. The series will be "Monographs on Industrial Chemistry," and is under the general editorship of Sir Edward Thorpe. Among those either ready or in preparation for early issue are "The Applications of Electrolysis in Chemical Industry," "The Natural Organic Coloring Matters," "The Scientific Use of Coal," and "Edible Oils and Fats."

A new book by Walter Weyl, "The End of the War," is announced for publication May 21 by the Macmillan Company. Its purpose is to show the relation of the world war to the whole history of American thought and action and to forecast the future policy of this country toward Europe and the world.

Emerson Hough, whose new novel, "The Way Out," is a May publication of D. Appleton & Co., has written a pamphlet called "The Indefinite American Attitude Toward the War and When Shall It End," which is being widely distributed by the American Defense Society.

Harold McGrath's new novel, "The Girl in His House," is ready for immediate publication by Harper & Brothers. It is a mystery story involving a New York clubman, his fortune and a beautiful girl.

B. W. Huebsch has taken over the publication of the works of Thorstein B. Veblen, whose first work, "The Theory of the Leisure Class," attracted attention twenty years ago, while his succeeding volumes, "The Instinct of Workmanship," "Imperial Germany, and the Industrial Revolution," and "The Nature of Peace" have all had wide reading. Professor Veblen, who is a member of the faculty of the University of Missouri, is in Washington working with the United States Food Administration.

Grantland Rice, whose "Songs of a Stalwart," was recently published by D. Appleton & Co., is in France in the artillery branch of the American army. Before the war he was well known as a writer of sporting articles.

The toils and achievements of the American engineers who are helping to win the war are presently to be made known by Francis A. Collins, in a book on "The Fighting Engineers," which the Century Company announces for early publication. It is a popular account of the activities of the 115,000 engineers now actively engaged with our army in the work of construction and destruction, forestation, road-making, mining, &c. on the other side, mainly in France.

Louise Beebe Wilder's book on "Color in My Garden" is being published by Doubleday, Page & Co. in a de luxe edition, limited to 1,500 copies, illustrated with line charts and many plates in color by Anne Winegar. The paintings from which these color plates were made are of Mrs. Wilder's own garden and show the procession of color combinations during a single season.

Copies of the biography of Booker T. Washington, by Emmet J. Scott and Lyman Beecher Stowe, have been placed by Julius Rosenwald of Chicago in the libraries of all the cantonments throughout the United States where negro soldiers are stationed.

The Jack London Club, lately organized in Boston, is the outgrowth of Mr. London's posthumous novel, "Michael, Brother of Jerry," which tells the story of a dog trained for stage exhibition. The purpose of the club is to discourage the business of such training of dogs because of the cruel methods employed and its members—it has neither officers nor dues—pledge themselves to one condition only—to get up and leave any theatre or place of amusement if trained animals are brought upon the stage for exhibition.

Stephen Graham, whose several books about Russia telling of his travels on foot through various parts of that country have made him well known to American readers, is at the front as a private in the Scots Guards. A new book by Mr. Graham, "The Quest of the Face," is listed for Spring publication by the Macmillan Company.

A new book by Felix Adler to be called "An Ethical Philosophy of Life" and containing his ripest thinking on the problems of life is ready for immediate issue by D. Appleton & Co.

W. H. Mallock's new book, which E. P. Dutton & Co. have ready for publication is entitled "The Limits of Pure Democracy" and is another of Mr. Mallock's challenging studies in political science which he now and then throws into the arena of discussion. In this work he endeavors to show that while pure democracy is the natural system of government for small communities, some form of oligarchy must take its place as States increase in size and their life becomes more complex.

TAXATION PRINCIPLES

OUR MONEY AND THE STATE. By Hartley Withers. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co. $1.25.

HARTLEY WITHERS writes on money and taxation more nearly within the brilliancy and authority of Bagehot than any other contemporary. His subjects come close to the interests of all and will do so for an indefinite future. In this book he discusses whether it is easier and better to pay for wars with money raised by loans or taxes, and how the taxes should be levied. No one has shown more clearly that no part of the burden of winning of the war can be shifted to posterity, not even by loans. It is obvious that posterity can render no service before it exists, and that when posterity arrives it will pay the war loans to itself and not to its ancestors. There is no source of the goods and services necessary for the winning of the war but living men and existing goods. If they can be paid for by loans they can be paid for by taxes, for those who buy the loans could provide the taxes. Taxation is a single operation. Loans are a double operation, the money provided being paid twice, first by those who advance it, and again by taxpayers to the bondholders at their maturity. Loans also are unfair to the millions in the military forces. They abandon their vocations to defend the country, and when they return from the war they must bear taxes to pay the bondholders' interest.

The only use of loans is to extract funds from those deluded by the process into thinking that somebody else pays the taxes, whereas taxation reaches everybody if it is well laid. Mr. Withers prefers taxes, because about them also there is a minimum of humbug and camouflage. Their defect is that they cannot be graduated or differentiated in the various ways by which taxes are proportioned to ability to pay. Next in advantage comes the income taxes, and Mr. Withers proposes graduation far more elaborate than is our way. He would distinguish between incomes from present earnings, incomes from accumulated earnings, and incomes by gift or inheritance. He would also distinguish between incomes which are saved or spent, and the manner of spending. He would favor those who spend to raise families, and those who save and invest their funds which thus are placed at the service of business.

Mr. Withers nowhere mentions our methods of taxation, but if his book had been read by those who levy them we would not have a law which not even the Treasury understands, and which extracts taxes which would gladly be paid in a manner which arouses protests loud, deep, and general. Those whose minds are cloudy on the subject, and who wish to read plain commonsense, presented in a manner as attractive as the subject allows, can make no mistake in reading Mr. Withers's book.

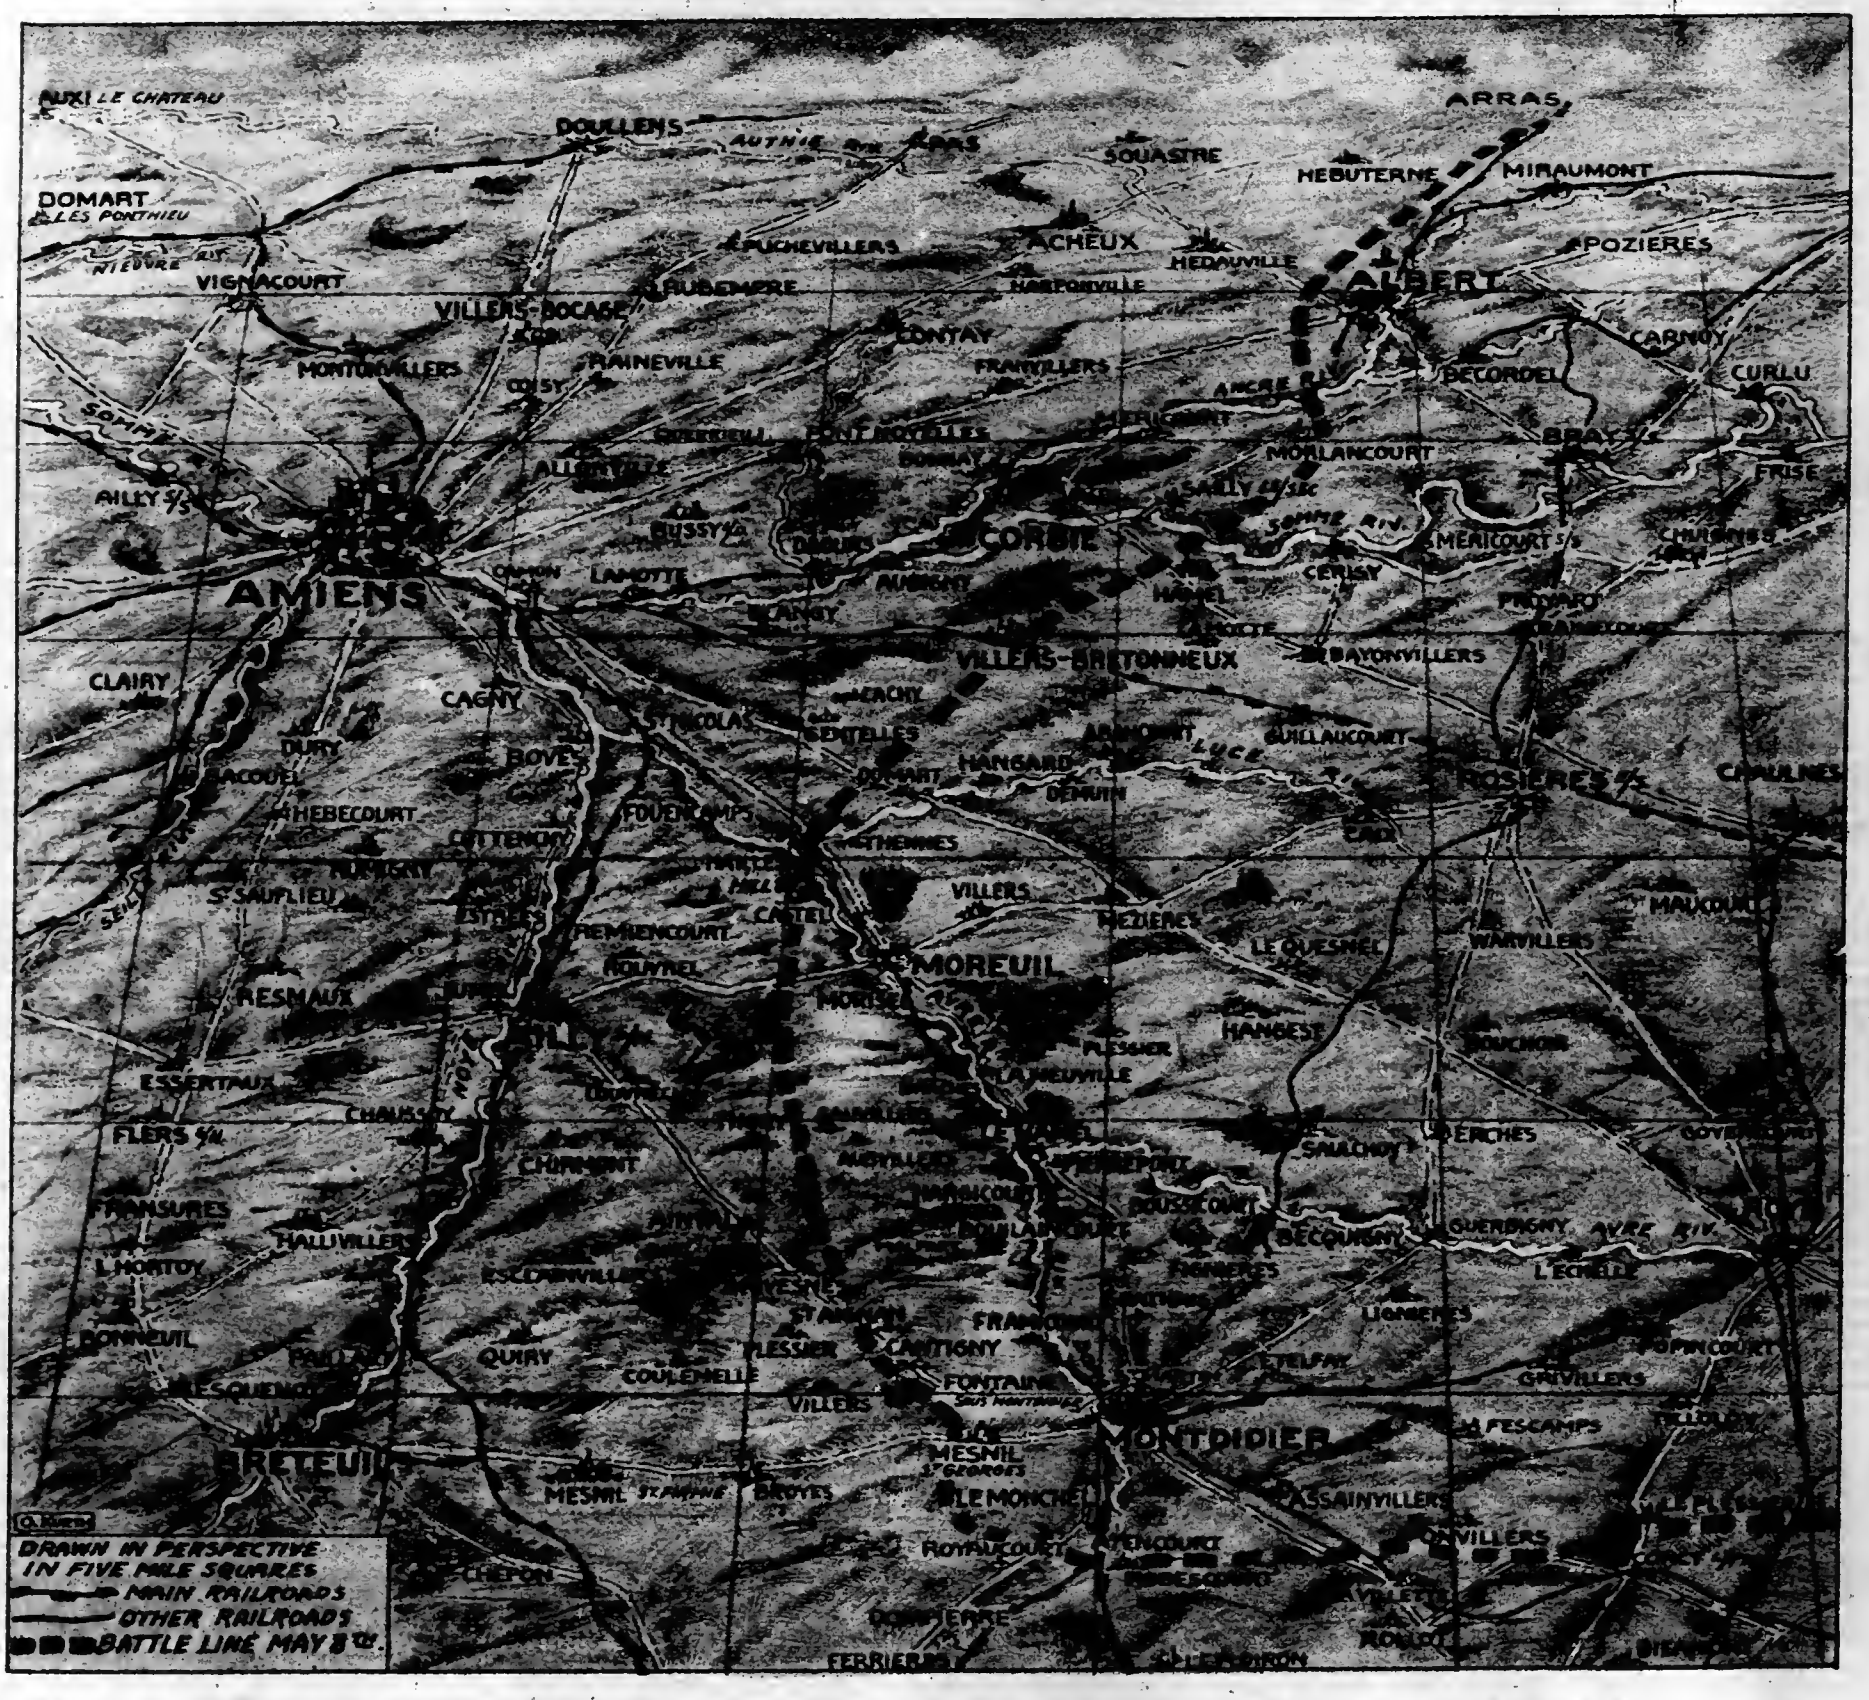
THE CRUCIAL PICARDY FRONT

British, French, and Ever-Increasing Forces of Americans Here Face Tremendous Concentration of German Troops



THIS map shows in detail the Picardy front before Amiens where the German drive was brought to a stop after the break-through around St. Quentin. On this section of front, military observers think, the German commanders have concentrated the bulk of their forces.

American soldiers are stationed in large numbers about Amiens. They have already met the Germans on this front in actual battle and beaten them. The principal fight in which Americans were engaged in this region occurred somewhere on the line between Villers-Bretonneux and Hangard.

Other strong American forces, according to report, are in the vicinity of Cantigny and Fontaine-sous-Montdidier, southeast of Amiens.

As will be seen by a glance at the map, Amiens is a railroad junction of great importance, the capture of which by the enemy would seriously dislocate allied communications—in fact, practically disrupt connection between the British armies holding the line north and west of the city and the French armies stationed south of Amiens. In the opinion of many experts, Hindenburg and Ludendorff still pin their main hopes to shattering their opponents on this front.

whether the proposal is to continue the war until the insolence of Great Britain and America is sufficiently humbled, or —what is just now much more to be feared—their desire to unburden a war-weary world becomes supreme, certain facts stand very firm and bulk very large. It was the British fleet which, more than any other influence, brought to the world the freedom of the seas and its system of open ports. It was the German submarine policy and ruthless practice which has temporarily destroyed this freedom of the seas. The British fleet, powerfully reinforced by the French and the greatly enlarged American and Japanese fleets, is going to have the say as to when German ships, both warships and merchant marine, shall again enjoy the freedom of the seas, and on what terms they shall be reinstated in its enjoyment. This means that the Entente Allies will dictate to Germany and Austria the time and the terms of their resumption of foreign trade to the Westward Ho!

Another important fact concerns the supply of raw materials for certain of the most important lines of manufacture and industry. These materials are largely, and some of them almost completely, in the control of the Entente Allies. Here, too, it is likely to depend on the will of the owners, how much of, and on what terms, German and Austrian manufacturers and traders shall have these materials.

Still another important fact is this: Perhaps especially the United States, but to a considerable extent all the Entente Allies, are fast rendering themselves independent of Germany for those things for which they formerly found it necessary or convenient to go to Germany. As for us, we need not be dependent on any foreign nation for any of the necessaries, or for most of the comforts and luxuries, of civilized living. But for this very reason we ought to become not only more efficient, but also more just and more generous in our commercial relations with foreign nations. We may be perfectly sure, however, that neither justice nor generosity will be appreciated by an unreformed Germany.

Now, doubtless, Germany will continue to bully and wheedle the Russia it has ruined and is rapidly taking possession of, and all the weak and silly peoples of the East, both near and far, as long as Germany remains what Germany now is. And we can scarcely expect to prevent or even to curb this so long as we remain in the totally inconsistent attitude of being active allies of France and Great Britain and Italy, while maintaining peace with Turkey and Bulgaria. But even the utmost success of this iniquitous drive to the eastward will not restore foreign trade to Germany in westward directions. How, then, should an outraged world treat an outrageous and unrepentant and unreformed German Government, and a nation still under the control of such a Government, in this to them most important regard?

And, first, it can scarcely be supposed that our own Government, whatever may be implied in even the latest rhetorical utterances of its head, or in the advice of some of its prominent "economists," will refuse for a suitable time at least to offer protection to those "infant industries" which are so rapidly making us independent of Germany and working toward the great extension and enrichment of our foreign trade.

Shall we not also make some more definite arrangement for the immediate and near future to trade chiefly with our friends and little or none at all with our enemies? Shall we not for the time being, to greater or less extent, "boycott" Germany? Even before the beginning of the war the trademark "made in Germany" had lost much of its pristine glamour for those who knew the reality of things. The old-time German thoroughness and honesty had suffered a grievous abatement. There are hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, in this country to whom it has become distinctly offensive. It will take a considerable time for this offense to pass away.

Meantime, (silly as it may seem to the economist who will not admit that the moral and aesthetic emotions ought to influence mankind in their buying and selling,) there may develop a large party of Americans ready to sign pledges to have nothing to do with things "made in Germany." It is conceivable that the heathen of India and Ceylon may revolt from buying their idols in the future from the arch desecrators of sacred places. At any rate, the feelings of the people of the Entente Allies will not be altogether placid in the view of resuming cordial business relations with this outrageous nation. Our babies of the next generation are more likely to nurse dolls made in Japan, or China, or in the United States, than dolls "made in Germany." And who would care, with the spirit which is going to prevail in America after the war, to eat his breakfast off a plate bearing this appetite-destroying trademark?

There remains the most important measure of all belonging to this class. We shall probably make treaties favoring trade with our allies and with those who have remained really neutral, and in some respects distinctly unfavorable to resuming trade on equal terms with Germany. Distinct movements in this direction are already afoot in France, Great Britain, and Japan and China; it is altogether likely that they will prevail more and more, as the war goes on, in this country also. And if the seamen of the other Allies adopt the resolutions already passed by the British Seamen's League, they will refuse to handle ships in any way concerned in trade with the nation which has so ruthlessly murdered so many of the members of their craft.

In considering these reactions of an outraged world against an outrageous Germany, the points of view of fact have been pretty closely adhered to. Doubtless different persons will differ somewhat widely from us when they assume the points of view of expediency or morality. And, as has already been said, there are persons, who can scarcely with justice be called definitely pro-German, who will hold that to indulge in these reactions after the war is over would be inexpedient and immoral. But let such bear in mind the nature of the German Government and the nature of the German people as at present governed. Then they may come to the conclusion that it is altogether best for the world and for the German people themselves that a world so outraged by a war so outrageously initiated and conducted should inflict grievous punishment on the guilty. At least, that is the contention of the writer of this article; and he bases it on grounds of morality and religion.

The Only Kind of Peace Talk That Counts

two to twenty-eight days is a fair average."

From a Colonel of Engineers, dated April 2:

"It takes approximately three weeks for letters to reach me from the United States."

From a First Lieutenant, M. O. R. Corps, dated April 1:

"1. Average time for receipt of mail is from three to seven weeks.

"2. Practically all the mail the unit expected dated March 4 to 12 was received March 29-30."

From a Lieutenant Colonel, Quartermaster's Corps, dated March 30:

"About three weeks is the minimum time. Generally it is three months. My letters come from Tennessee."

From an Assistant Superintendent U. S. Army Postal Service No. —, dated March 27:

"Mail made up at Chelsea Terminal, New York City, to units in this division, is delivered twenty days from date of mailing. Mail from Wabash Terminal, Chicago, Ill., twenty-six days. No complaints from units."

From a Detachment Commander, line of communications, dated March 31:

"Since November there has been a marked difference in the amount of time consumed in the transmission of mail from the United States here. It seems much less time than formerly. Second-class matter and newspapers seem to be hopelessly delayed, so that they are useless upon arrival.

"Packages are still badly delayed, and I can give you many instances of cases where the contents have been stripped before arrival. Received last week package shipped in the early part of December.

"Newspapers and letters seem to take from seven to ten days shorter time to reach me than when they are mailed to former Paris address and then remailed care of the United States Post Office.

"As far as I can tell there seems to be very little mail lost in transmission. It may be delayed greatly, and often two letters will come in the same mail with dates thirty days apart."

From a First Lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps, dated March 30:

"2. I wish to call your attention to the fact that a large proportion of my letters, though plainly and adequately addressed, go astray en route and reach me from six to eight weeks after mailing. Such mail is always marked with red ink, showing that it has been sent to some other station, or perhaps two stations before being sent here. There seems to be no rule about what stations this mail is first sent to. This can only be the result of careless sorting when the mail is first put into pouches in the United States or in this country. This condition is constantly growing worse, as far as my personal mail is concerned, and my friends tell me the same about theirs."

From a Superintendent of an Army Post Office, dated March 30:

"The consensus of military officials is that it takes from twenty to twenty-five days now, but that in January it took over a month. I want to call attention to the last letter mail received from Bordeaux. Car left Bordeaux at 2:20 P. M., March 26, carrying 110 full sealed pouches of letter mail. Car arrived at this office at 1 P. M. March 28. At 2:10 P. M. it was loaded. At 4 P. M. seventy-five pouches of these were loaded in the ration trains and immediately left for the boys in the trenches, the mail being postmarked in the States from March 4 to 12, and would be delivered to the boys by March 30."

From a private in the Signal Corps, dated March 28:

"A great deal of attention has been directed to the mail service over here. Most of it, no doubt, was in order, but that is a thing of the past, and I wish to call attention to the splendid improvement effected by the Postal Service. Today I received two letters, one dated March 8, from my home, Calumet, Mich., and the other, March 9, from Marquette, Mich. Heretofore letters have reached me a month and a half or two months after being mailed."

The time between date of mailing and delivery of letters referred to above ranges from twenty days to forty days, the average being less than thirty days.

From a private in an aero squadron, dated March 28:

"I regret to state that up to the present I consider it very poor. The average time for forty-eight letters received from Texas and Louisiana was forty days, some being on the way as long as sixty-eight to ninety-eight days, while others were delivered in twenty-one days.

"I have been with this command since coming to France, which has been stationed at only two places, and I can't think of any reasonable excuse why letters properly addressed should be sent to casual camps, base hospital, and various places before reaching me."

From a Captain, Quartermaster's Corps, dated April 1:

"With second-class mail since Christmas I have been most unfortunate. I am a subscriber for The Chicago Daily Tribune, The Saturday Evening Post, The Army and Navy Journal, and one or two other magazines, the names of which I fail to recall, it having been so long since I received them. I receive about one in every three of The Army and Navy Journal, the balance apparently are either lost or stolen. * * * I have noted that mail coming to regimental organizations, that are together as a unit, has arrived very promptly, in all probability for the reason that mail sacks addressed to definite units are filled in New York and are not opened until reaching their destinations. We of the Quartermaster, Ordnance, Medical, Signal, and Engineer Corps and other small detachments of regimental units suffer alike, our mail being handled in a more indirect manner."

From a Y. M. C. A. Secretary, dated March 26:

"My last two groups of mail have arrived from Minneapolis in sixteen days. This fact I am sure calls for congratulations and commendations of the men involved in handling the mails of the American soldiers in France, and I want to take this opportunity of expressing my personal appreciation of this service so quickly and successfully developed."

From a Major of an aero squadron, dated March 28:

"The average length of time of my first-class mail to date has been between one and a half and two months. It has come to my notice that mail addressed to me has been in France over a month before I received it. Mail plainly addressed '1st Aero Squadron, American Expeditionary Forces,' has been sent to Foggia, Italy, to the 6th U. S. Marines, the 15th Field Artillery, the 3d Aviation Instruction Centre, the 10th Aero Squadron, Colombey-les-Belles, and Camp d'Avord. There is absolutely no excuse for these letters being sent to these places. * * * On Feb. 15 I received packages from the United States and did not receive letters telling me that these packages were sent until twenty-seven days later."

From a First Lieutenant, A. S. S. C., dated March 28:

"It has often taken as long as two months for letters to reach me from Philadelphia, and there have been instances where it took eighteen days for mail to reach me from Paris. As this is the only squadron I have been attached to, and as it is only the second station to which this squadron has been sent since its arrival in France, it seems there can be no excuse why my mail should be sent to three or four different places before it reaches me."

From a Corporal in the Ordnance Department, dated March 29:

"I hereby certify that during a period of six months with the A. E. F. the delivery of personal mail has been very satisfactory; likewise have my letters reached the United States within a very reasonable time. In some cases I have received mail from Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, in seventeen days after mailing, which should be considered prompt delivery."

Washington's Acute Wartime Problem of Traffic Congestion

BECAUSE its population has increased over 60,000 in the last year, Washington has as remarkable a traffic problem as ever confronted any city," said a recent visitor to the capital. "Most of its residents, as well as practically all of its war population, are in the Government service and must be transported to and from the various offices at hours that never vary. Uncle Sam's time clock rings for all at one and the same moment. It is really a great sight to see Washington going to and returning from office. Some walk, some go on wheels, a few in taxis which they club together for and get at a monthly rate. But most go in surface cars (there being no other sort) and, believe me, the going is not good.

"The cars run so close together that you wonder if they are not going to pile up on top of each other, and the cross-street dangers grow greater every day. One way the authorities have tried to help the situation is by running semi-express cars, which skip some blocks and stop at others, and anybody who has the combination can get rich quick in Washington these days. Inside all the cars everybody is jumbled together helter-skelter without regard to size, age, color, or anything else but the frightful business of getting there. A surface car crush may sometimes have all the horrors of a subway crush without any alleviating element of knowing that, once yon are in, you are going to go for a few blocks anyway without being stopped.

"But really the situation is met much better than could be expected and has some odd features. The traffic 'cops' at the most congested points now stand on little bridgelike platforms, where they may be plainly seen, and I don't believe that this Summer they will have umbrellas raised over them to protect them from the sun's rays as in the good old days gone by. At night Mr. Traffic Cop wears a white 'slicker,' and a searchlight is thrown down on him directly from the roof of a nearby building. It is rather weird to come upon him suddenly if you are unprepared. Also, instead of isles of safety, as we know them in New York, platforms of wood have been erected."

Red Cross Work Here an Aid to Morale Abroad

By Extending to Soldiers and Sailors' Dependents Financial Help, Advice, and Sympathy, It Heartens Both Families and Fighters

KEEP the home fires burning,' That is the biggest and most important service of those who remain at home to our soldiers and sailors at the front."

It was a high official of the War Department who expressed in that fashion the importance of the maintenance of the morale of the troops in the field and of the civil population at home. To see to it that the soldier's family is contented, free from want or unnecessary cares and burdens, and that the man himself knows that all's well "back home" is already one of the big jobs confronting the people of the United States and it will be a bigger job as more and more of our men go "over there."

The American Red Cross has already begun to get tbis work well in hand, and as its importance comes to be more generally understood and realized, volunteer capahle workers help in keeping pace with the need.

By far the largest work the American Red Cross has done and is doing is the alleviation of distress among the civilian population of France, not merely by gifts and financial aid, but by an intimate contact with the soldiers' families, which strengthens their courage to hold out until the end. It is this confident courage that, transmitted from the family to the soldier himself, gives the French Army a degree of morale unsurpassed in the history of warfare—and it is upon the morale of their fighting forces that victory for the Allies depends. It is the testimony of all who are familiar with the work of the Red Cross in France that it has been the largest single factor in strengthening the French morale; its work in the United States, through its Home Service department, may easily become an equally vital factor in strengthening and maintaining the morale of our own fighting forces.

It is difficult to define concisely the functions and work of the Red Cross Home Service. Its scope is as boundless as the category of human needs and troubles. Broadly, it may be said that its business is to keep the soldier's family from worrying and so keep the soldier—or sailor—from worrying; but the sources of worry are so multitudinous and the means employed to remove them so manifold that every new case presents a new problem. Rules, except the broadest generalities, are impossible; wide human sympathy, deep understanding of human nature, keen interest in individual human troubles, and a knowledge of available means of relief are none too extensive an equipment for the Home Service worker. Thousands of men and women possessing these characteristics are in the service, and thousands more are undergoing special training for the work in the Home Service Institutes and the classes established in connection with every Red Cross Chapter.

One of the important phases of the Home Service work is the establishment of the Red Cross as the connecting link between the soldier overseas or in camp and his family. The soldier fails to hear from his family; naturally, he worries—his efficiency as a soldier is definitely impaired. Or he may receive letters that worry him—details of home troubles, sometimes serious, sometimes trivial, but still sufficient to distract his mind from the main business of being an efficient soldier. More than 90 per cent. of army desertions, in the experience of the Allies, have been due to unhappy letters from home; the home tie is stronger than the call of duty. Accessible to every soldier is a Red Cross representative who, through the Red Cross can communicate directly, through the Home Service section of the local chapter in the soldier's home town, with the family, and get some cheering word back to the man in khaki. It may be that the letters sent have been misdirected or lost in the mails. The Home Service worker may find a young wife of the spoiled, petted kind so common in America, who has been used to unloading a budget of household worries upon her husband every evening and who does not realize that part of her duty is to keep him cheerful. Or there may be real trouble that can be straightened out with the kindly, intelligent, organized aid of the Red Cross, to the definite improvement of the morale both of the particular soldier involved and of his family. Perhaps it is the family at home that estahlishes the first contact with the Red Cross—the man at the front has not been heard from, or his name has appeared in the casualty lists or among the missing. The Red Cross can and does ascertain the facts about his condition, or if he is a prisoner in Germany gets into communication with him. It is the only means of communication between American prisoners in Germany and our own Government.

Often the expected money, allotted from the soldier's pay, has not been received from the Government. The Red Cross Home Service acts as the intermediary between the family and the Government. And by a recent order of the War Department the Red Cross also has become the recognized attorney for soldiers and their families in the enforcement of their civil rights under the new Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Rights act.

W. Frank Persons, the Red Cross's Director General of Civilian Relief.

The 12,000 and more instances in which assistance of one sort or another has already been rendered to soldiers' families by the Home Service Division of the New York County Chapter of the Red Cross cover a variety of conditions almost as numerous as the cases themselves. The mother of one soldier, for instance, soon after her only son had gone into the service, required a serious operation; the money available would not pay for it. The Red Cross provided proper surgical and hospital attention and advanced money to tide her over. Innumerable cases of the failure on the part of a wife or dependent mother to receive allotments of the soldier's pay are traced to such causes as the soldier's illegible penmanship or his enlistment under his real name while he was known to his associates by another, and so his family was difficult to locate. "James Baker" in the city directory, for example, may have enlisted under his real name of "Jacques Boulanger"; his family may not know his real name—even his wife may have forgotten it.

The young wife of a soldier who went over with General Pershing's first detachment encountered unexpected complications in the business affairs he had left in her charge; she had little business experience and was almost in despair. Her case was laid by the Red Cross before an able lawyer and the head of a big banking institution; they worked out a solution of all her difficulties. Her letters to her soldier husband took on a new tone and he won promotion.

The three boys of a navy man were running wild; their mother was unable to discipline them. The Red Cross Home Service diverted their energies into better channels, with the aid of the Y. M. C. A. and the Boy Scouts, and assigned one of its "Friendly Visitors," a woman of wide sympathies, to visit the young mother regularly and encourage her to write cheerfully about things at home to the man at sea.

One soldier left his bride with relatives, confident that she would be well cared for. Instead, they made her a household drudge, imposed upon her shamefully, and compelled her to give them, as "board money," all of the allotment of her husband's pay. The Home Service found her congenial employment at good wages, a room where she could live alone in pleasant surroundings, and membership in an association of young business women where she could have congenial companionship.

Another young woman, the wife of a drafted soldier, fell into loose ways of living and neglected her defective child. The Red Cross obtained the necessary legal authority to place the child in a private sanitarium, where eminent specialists are giving their time without compensation.

The list of specific cases could be lengthened indefinitely. Thousands of families have been informed for the first time by the Red Cross Home Service of their right to allotments of a soldier's pay; there have been innumerable cases where children have been taken out of underpaid or too exacting employment and replaced in school or provided with more suitable work; thousands of wives of soldiers and sailors have been provided with opportunities to earn more and to live better. Especial attention is paid to the maintenance of proper standards of living; every effort is made to see that these standards do not deteriorate in the absence of the wage earner. Thrift and economy are taught; women who have never known how to spend wisely are taught the difference between extravagance and comfort. If the soldier is promoted to a commission, the new associations he will make in the army demand that his family shall promote itself with him, and his wife is brought into contact with the wives of other officers.

The medical phases of Home Service are legion. Provision for the best possible care in confinement and afterward is an important phase. In hundreds of cases conditions of ill-health, some of them serious, have been brought to light and remedied. The Red Cross, it might be said here, recognizes no distinction as to the need for service between the unmarried woman who is the mother of a soldier's child and the soldier's wife. The latter, however, can claim and obtain an allotment of part of his pay; the former cannot. To her and to others who have a right to depend upon the earnings of the man who has gone to the front, but who are not legally entitled to Government allowances, financial aid is given.

The meanest class of grafters are the men who try to induce the mothers and wives of soldiers to part with the money the Government sends them, by offering them "bargains" in real estate, trying to sell them unnecessary and overpriced luxuries on the installment plan, and in countless other ways endeavoring to prey upon their inexperience. To many families the sums of money which they receive monthly represent larger amounts of ready cash than they have been accustomed to having at any one time and they fall easy victims to the wiles of these sharks. As the activities of petty swindlers multiply the need for friendly aid increases.

An adequate idea of the multiplicity of services rendered hy the Home Service section is supplied by the actual record of one chapter, in a city of about 400,000. The conditions in which aid was extended are classified as follows:

Tuberculosis	16
Epilepsy	5
Insanity	10
Heart disease	10
Occupational diseases	1
Disability from accident	6
Feeblemindedness	12
Old age	7
Other diseases	100
Juvenile delinquency	21
Blindness or impaired sight	11
Underemployment	7
Unemployment	33
Loan shark victim	1
Miscellaneous, (including confinem'ts)	167
Total	402

The services rendered, grouped into rather inclusive classes, are as follows:

Financial aid	202
Medical aid	92
Hospital	33
Dental aid	10
Transportation	18
Temporary employment	50
Permanent employment	19
Business equipment provided	5
Special vocational training	8
Extension of credit	41
Church connection strengthened	4
Legal aid	16
Removal to better homes	23
Families visited	77

This chapter has a staff of 194 volunteer workers in its Home Service section, including fifty-four "Friendly Visitors," thirty-seven investigators, thirty-six committee members, thirty-two clerks, and thirty-five motor cars contributed for the service.

In Red Cross Home Service there is no parading of the necessities of an unfortunate family either before its neighbors or members of the Red Cross organization. Investigators, "Friendly Visitors," and other workers wear no uniforms; they do not display Red Cross flags nor in any other manner advertise their missions. The work is not "charity" in the ordinary sense; it is a service to the country.

Twenty-five Home Service Institutes in as many cities have been established. They are in connection with universities and colleges. Those attending must take a six weeks' course, giving all their time to their studies, and must pledge to the Red Cross a definite period of work after graduation. Other institutes are being established. For those who are unable to attend these institutes there are shorter courses. These are conducted by the Red Cross chapters. The "Friendly Visitors" are largely recruited from those who have taken these chapter courses.

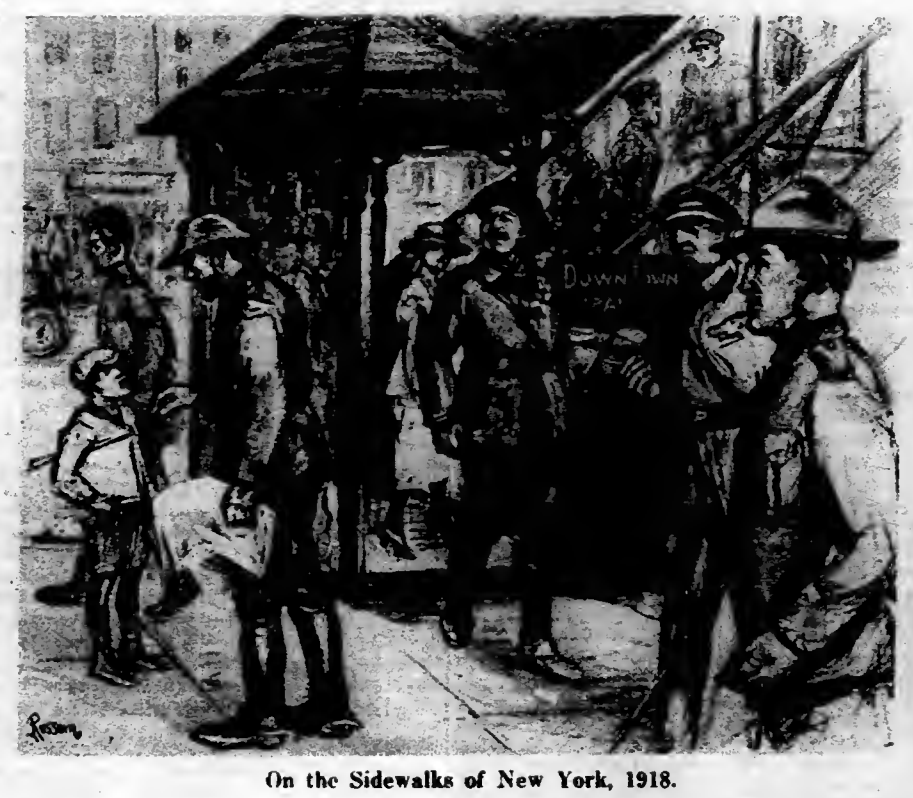
It is not the majority of families of absent soldiers and sailors that require the help of the Home Service section, but in many others the power of self-helpfulness has already been strained to the breaking point by lack of opportunity, ill-health or the sudden change in the way of living due to war conditions. For these the Red Cross is extending the helping hand; to their men "over there" it is carrying the message that the home fires are still burning.

are liberally answered, there seems to be no end of floating, ready money. The fakers know this, and the hotels are said to be alive with shrewd confidence men, proposing anything from mining stock to "a quiet little game in a little apartment uptown."

Perhaps another reason why so much money is being spent aboveboard is that the underworld practically is no more. Where, oh, where is the vice of yesteryear? We thought the town was cleaned up last year, and yet here comes the District Attorney with his vice hounds and on an intensive crusade uncovers nests of deviltry we know not of—and puts the evil birds to flight once more.

Yet it must be nearly the last stand when they have taken to roosting in chop suey parlors and in the tonneaus of motor cars under the shadows of the Palisades. New York was never so fleckless—never so militarily correct. It is doubtful whether any great city was ever so free of obvious viciousness, despite the fact that a wave of housebreakers is said to have descended upon us.

A certain class of the community is obliged patriotically to endure this espionage until one is moved to mild protest. This class is formed of the frequenters of the all-night restaurants and the cabarets. It is a sad plight reached by this inveterate army of noble spenders when we find them driven every early morning, in jewels and evening clothes, to the bare tables of the dairy lunch counters.



On the Sidewalks of New York, 1918.

One of these dairy lunches, near the Circle, has been singled out as the favorite resort of the old crowd that used to go to Jack's and Healy's. If any one doubts the sincerity of the observance of the early closing law, let him happen in on that dairy lunch about 3 A.M.—any morning. There one can invariably discover a choice collection of the most eminent Broadway celebrities—eating eggs and drinking milk!

There is no known way of corrupting the unassailable morality of this respectable establishment. The waiters will not "rustle a drink" even for a gold piece. Nor can one bring his own bottle with him. A lynx-eyed floor manager is constantly on the job to prevent just such a calamity.

A further evidence that we are at last actually in the war is the spy fever, which is near its apex. Nearly every one now has a "pet spy" under observation. None of us may be confident that he has not been denounced to the Secret Service. Imagination seems to have a universal habitation. And it plays hob with a febrile community far from war's realities.

If there were only some way of distinguishing spies from other people—say, painting their faces blue, for instance—the imaginings of half our good folk would be sadly interrupted. A Government official recently told the writer that more than half the "information" submitted to the Secret Service proved to be spurious and founded on vague suspicions, yet he had no desire to discourage it, for out of the mass of chaff occasionally he winnowed a bit of sterling espionage wheat.

From Fifth Avenue She Turns to Fly-Fishing

Yellowstone Park Streams and Other Far Western Waters Lure Mrs. Robert C. Morris to Pursuit of the Brook Trout

MRS. ROBERT C. MORRIS of New York is an authority on Western fishing. She is not the kind of authority who writes books and pronounces judgments and tells other people what they ought to do, but she knows the game after long experience. In the Winter she lives on Fifth Avenue, and goes to the opera, and rides in her limousine, and does the other things that city women do; in the Summer she is off to the Rockies to fish, ride the mountain trails, camp, and fish again.

When Mrs. Morris was asked what was the chief difference between Eastern and Western fishing, she remarked, "Well, in the West one catches fish!" Then she added quickly: "I don't really know anything myself about fishing in the East. All my fishing is done in the West, in the Rockies. From what I hear of fishing in this part of the country, it seems that Western fishing is more—successful. * * *

She fishes in and near the Yellowstone National Park, where the principal fish are lake and brook trout. In the early years of fishing in Yellowstone Park she caugbt more than one dinner by literally picking fish out of the water with her hands. Of course, like other devotees of the fly rod, she says the enjoyment is not found merely in filling one's basket.

"The keenest joy in fishing," she observed, "is not expressed in the question, 'How many?' or 'How large?' The real joy of the sportsman is in luring one fish that you've never been able to get. You know that he has his home behind a certain rock. You've tried him with every kind of fly. His capture has become a definite ambition. Sometimes he has come and taken a look at your fly; often he has swam around it and inspected it; perhaps he has even given it a nibble. But he has resisted every lure. You are literally matching your brain against his. You may pursue that one fish all Summer, perhaps. But when you get him, you are satisfied; you certainly don't feel like fishing any more that day! It has been a battle of wits, a tussle of strategy, and you've won! That's fishing!

At this point the questioner, who is not a fisherman, committed a sad faux pas.

"You speak of the flies one uses," said the questioner with a genuine interest but an air of intelligence purely specious, "but doesn't one often fish with worms?"

An expression of something very like horror flitted across Mrs. Morris's face. "Worms!" she exclaimed, "worms! Never!" Then she laughed.

"No, I must modify that statement," she said. "It is certainly not sportsmanlike to fish with a worm, but I cannot say that it is never done, because it is done—I am obliged to confess that I have known people who were otherwise good sportsmen who sometimes did fish with a worm. But it is really only permissible in cases of dire necessity, when food has to be got.

"You see, a worm sinks; there is a bit of lead attached, and the worm and hook go straight to the bottom. Fly-fishing is just the opposite. The fly alights on the surface of the water. The important matter is the way it is placed there. It takes skill to place the fly on the water without the line hitting, too—if it does that it causes a splash and the fish is frightened away. One of the best ways is to throw the fly so that it lands against the grass on the opposite bank of the stream—I am speaking of fishing for brook trout now—and then drops gently from the grass into the water. It is a very wise old trout who knows then that it is not a real fly.

This Is the Kind of Trout Mrs. Morris Gets from Rocky Mountain Streams.

"The one physical necessity for successful fly-fishing is a flexible wrist," says Mrs. Morris. But even the person who is thus blessed by nature is not free from the need of practice to attain real skill. Mrs. Morris has put in long stretches of time in practicing casting—and not alone on the water itself. Open fields offer an excellent place to "work up" one's ability to land a fly properly on the grass.

"You must throw the line back of you to a certain position," she explained, "and hold it for an instant before you throw it forward; it is holding it for just that fraction of a second that makes the line go out straight when you throw it forward; it would tangle otherwise. The reason so many people fail as fishermen is that they hold their wrists too rigidly.

"The Yellowstone Park and the waters just outside the park boundaries are a paradise for lovers of trout fishing. The park laws are very liberal regarding fishing. There is fine stream fishing for those who like to don rubber hip boots and walk down through the current, to cast a fly on the ripples or in the deep swirling pools or at the base of the falls. Then there is the lake fishing for those who prefer the lazier method of sitting in a boat or on a primitive raft.

"I have always found it best to fish either in the early morning or about twilight, but people fish all day long in the Yellowstone and come back with heavy baskets.

"In the Snake River the fishing is wonderful. I have gone down to the bank with two friends, thrown out a line with three flies on it, and pulled in at once, without waiting any longer than it took the fish to catch the bait, three fish—and on each side of me a friend was having the same experience! Those brook trout weighed a pound and a half each, on the average. But we decided that was not sport.

"The Fire Hole River in the Yellowstone Park is another magnificent place to fish. One gets up at 5 in the morning, rides over to the stream, ties one's horse, and walks down stream—and one brings home exactly as many fish as one wants.

"At Slough Creek, ten or fifteen years ago, I had heard tales of people catching fish with their hands. But I felt that I was quite old enough and wise enough to know that that was a fairy tale—or a fish tale, which is the same thing. But I did literally do just that. I went lightly and quietly to the edge of the bank—crawling, indeed, on hands and knees as I got right over the water—then, with my hand in a woolen glove, I slipped it quickly under the edge of the overhanging bank and pulled the fish right out! That cannot be done at Slough Creek any more—the fishing is still very good, but it is not that kind. But three years ago I saw fish caught 'by hand' in that way in Alaska.

"One afternoon I walked slowly down Trout Creek in Hayden Valley, above the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone, and caught forty brook trout. I did that by casting my line so that my fly fell on the opposite bank and dropped into the water from the grass.

"Perhaps the most wonderful fishing of any in that region is in Bridger Lake, just outside the park; you stand on the bank and see the fish darting from all directions after the fly you've just cast! But," added Mrs. Morris, with the sportsman's scorn of too easy things, "there is no diplomacy in fishing like that.

"The true sportsman is honest and obeys the law. The present law in the Yellowstone allows twenty fish per person for one day's catch."

Amateur Comedy Club Now in War Work

City's Foremost Private Theatrical Society Breaks Lifelong Rule by Giving Public Performances at Camps and for Relief Benefits

AFTER thirty-three years of existence as a private association of friends who amused themselves by giving theatrical performances to which the public was not invited, the Amateur Comedy Club has thrown away its tradition of exclusiveness, disregarded its precedent of selling no tickets, and turned itself "for the duration of the war" into an organization for the entertainment of soldiers. It is doing, indeed, more than that; for not only does the club present plays for men in the service, but it gives public performances, to which it charges admission, for the benefit of various war relief agencies and its own Soldiers and Sailors' Entertainment Fund. For three decades a unique organization in the life of the city and a luxury for the pleasure of its members and their friends, the club has become an organ of war service solely.

In December, 1917, at the Garden Theatre, it gave the first public performances of its history for the benefit of its newly created Soldiers and Sailors' Entertainment Fund, for which it made $1,520 clear profit. In April it closed the present season, having earned nearly $3,000 for the Junior War Relief. The closing performance was the 300th given by the club since its foundation nearly a quarter of a century ago.

The Amateur Comedy Club has become a very experienced company of players in these years, and there are not lacking those who say that the line between its productions and those of the best professional companies is scarcely to be distinguished. When the war came it decided, in 1884, to form a club for amateur theatricals, there was nothing unusual about the idea. Amateur theatricals were popular in the eighties. People were always "getting them up." Indeed, there were so many amateur performances of varying degrees of excellence in the New York of 1884 that the seven young men who formed the Comedy Club made it a strict rule, in order to keep their organization as private and exclusive as possible, that any member who appeared in a play with any other oragnization should be straightway dismissed from theirs. Alexander T. Mason, who, though retired from active membership, still keeps up his connection with the club and interest in its activities, is the only charter member whose name is on the roster today. But Edward Fales Coward, who in 1885 took part in the club's first play, is still an active member, and appeared last month in the 300th performance as he had in the first. Mr. Coward is also one of the most devoted and energetic members of the club's road companies for camp performances.

The early days of the club's history were somewhat checkered. It was a small organization. If one good player resigned or moved away the Amateur Comedy Club was threatened with a deathblow. Many times it was prophesied that the little association of friends who gave plays because they wanted to must for one reason or another be broken up. As the years went on, too, amateur acting became less popular. Not so many groups of young people got together and gave plays. But the men who made up the Comedy Club hung to-tions new to America. Often they are the original work of the members or friends of the club. At the 300th performance, last month, the program of three short plays was all original, and, as often happens, the work of staging, costuming, and coaching the production was all done by the members themselves.

The first play at the 300th performance was the work of Mr. Coward, who played in it. It was an east side drama, called "A Step Beyond," the story of a girl who waited while "her man" served his term in the penitentiary. Mr. Coward's daughter, who has played with him at the training camps, appeared in that play for the first time as an actress at one of the regular club performances. The second play was by Albert Sterner, who in the single year of his membership in the club has had the distinction of having two plays produced; this was a two-act character comedy in which Mr. Sterner himself played the part of a portrait painter. The third, "The Door," was a drama by Mildred Cram—a play made from the true story of the doorkeeper of an ancient castle in Siena, who, in the midst of the gay carnival time, crushed his daughter's lover to death in his iron door. The principal parts were played by Mrs. Harry M. Curtis and Harold W. Gould, and there were thirty people in the brilliant carnival scene.

The greatest artistic achievement of the Comedy Club was the introduction of Lord Dunsany's work to a New York stage—albeit behind closed doors, for that was in 1915, when the public was not admitted. Austin Strong, who is a sailors, aviators, takes it, the club's "road company" puts its scenery in a grip and sets forth. The only expense in producing "Three Hats" is for electric light and taxicabs for luggage—about $2.60!

Two club records were held by the late Evert Jansen Wendell, who became a member in 1885. During the thirty-two years of his membership he played in 128 performances, and appeared 113 times as Chevalier de Rocheferrier in "A Game of Cards." He was the only member (possibly the only amateur actor anywhere) who ever played more than 100 times in a single rôle. Now that they have formed themselves into répertoire road companies, the active members are greatly increasing the number of their rôles. Indeed more than one member has five parts "in his head" at the present moment!

In addition to twenty-two members who are army officers and one who is in the navy, thirteen civilian members of the club are engaged in war work.

"You can't imagine anything more delightful than working in the Comedy Club," said Albert Sterner. "It is like a family party. We have all the fun of giving plays and working hard over them, but with none of the petty jealousies and harshnesses that one hears of in professional work Nobody 'knocks' anybody else. Every one is having a good time. We work like maniacs full of glee!

"One of the jolliest things about the work of the club is the party we have at the end of each week of plays. We give three sets of performances—five productions, say, in a year—and at

Putting Our War Cripples Back On the Payroll

Comprehensive Plans Are Being Worked Out to Help Soldiers Get Remunerative Employment in Spite of Even the Most Serious Wounds or Other Injuries

By FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE.

THE problem of putting the crippled or disabled soldier or sailor back into self-supporting civil life is one with which all the European belligerent nations have been struggling for nearly four years, with only partial success in its solution. Based upon the combined experience of the Allies and the Central Powers, studied at first hand by a corps of specialists, and supplemented by co-operative research under the direction of the Red Cross Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men, and the National Association of Manufacturers, a program has been worked out by the Surgeon General's office of the army which is calculated to insure to every soldier of the United States who comes back from "Over There" minus an arm or a leg, blind, deaf, or otherwise handicapped, a better chance of reinstatement as a useful member of society than was afforded to any of the soldiers of the Allies in the first two or three years of the war.

Germany alone, the only nation that was prepared for this war, had included detailed plans for the reconstruction of maimed and mutilated soldiers in its war program from the beginning, and, under its autocratic system of government, has been able to enforce these plans, with the result that every crippled German soldier is put to work at some useful occupation with the slightest possible delay after his injury. The Allies have had to evolve their general plans as well as particular methods out of the bitter experience of war, in this as in other phases of the great conflict.

It was not until after the United States entered the war—in May, 1917, to be exact—that there was anything like a complete exchange of experiences and principles evolved from them in respect to the war cripple. Out of the first Interallied Conference on Reconstruction and Re-education of the Disabled Combatant, held in Paris May 8 to 12, 1917, at which delegates from the United States Surgeon General's office sat for the first time as representatives of their nation at war, came an international interchange of knowledge and ideas concerning the war cripple. At a second conference, held in London last November, a permanent interallied committee was established which will have its headquarters in a new Permanent Institute for the Disabled, endowed by the French Government with 150,000 francs ($30,000) for building and equipment, and maintained by annual appropriations of 30,000 francs ($6,000) each by the different allied nations represented. Already this clearing house of scientific and economic information for the benefit of the war cripple has done invaluable work in enabling the warring nations to profit by each other's experiences and mistakes. Not the least valuable contributions have come from American sources, our army surgeons having had opportunities for comparative observation of methods in vogue in different countries denied to those whose nations had been actually at war for three years. The United States, therefore, will begin its work of restoration with the accumulated experience of nearly four years to build upon.

So far as the phases of rehabilitation and reconstruction which will naturally come under the control of the Medical Departments of the army and navy are concerned, the general plan is substantially complete; minor details only remain to be worked out; the fundamental principles have been quite well established and the medical and surgical technique developed to a very high degree. The full scope of the Government's program for the ultimate vocational re-education of those requiring specialized technical training before they are again able to become economically self-supporting remains to be developed. A comprehensive plan has been worked out under the direction of Surgeon General Gorgas, in co-operation with various other Governmental agencies. A bill has been introduced in Congress for the purpose of securing the necessary enabling legislation to deal with the disabled soldier who has been discharged or is about to be discharged from the army for disability.

The first steps toward reinstatement to a self-supporting status, and by far the most important steps, must be begun almost immediately after the soldier receives the incapacitating injury and carried on continuously and cumulatively throughout the period of his hospital care.

This is especially true in the case of the soldier who has lost a limb, or who has been blinded. One of the most important lessons gained from the experience of the Allies, if not the most important, is that the problem of the restoration to usefulness of the crippled soldier is a psychological one, even more than it is surgical or economic. The experience of the French authorities, who had to deal with a terrific proportion of mutilés in the first two years of the war, was disheartening. Fewer than 17 per cent. of disabled soldiers expressed a desire or even willingness to learn how to do useful work. A large proportion had "lost their nerve" at the same time that they lost their limbs or their eyesight. Most of them felt that they had done enough for their country—that the nation owed them their living without effort. Because facilities for the early employment of patients, even at trivial occupations, were lacking in the military hospitals, they had acquired the habit of idleness which, when once fixed, is almost ineradicable.

Major Casey A. Wood, Who Is Compiling for Our Use the Experience of All the Allies in Restoring War Cripples.

The experience of France differed only in degree from that of the other allied nations. To avoid a similiar experience, and not only give every crippled soldier the best possible chance to become self-supporting, but to insure that he avails himself of the opportunity thus afforded, the psychological and economic rehabilitation of every American incapacitated by his injuries for further military service will begin with and go on parallel with his physical rehabilitation, which, in turn, will be a process not merely of "patching up" but of the actual development to their utmost usefulness of all of the injured man's remaining physical powers.

The first reaction of the man who has lost a limb is utter despair. He is "done for," in his own estimation. "Nobody has any use for a cripple," is the way in which nine out of ten express it. Unless he is a man whose former occupation has been mental, not dependent upon the use of his physical energies, he sees no ray of hope for his own future. Unless immediately rectified, this state of mind quickly becomes fixed and all but irremediable. So the first step toward rehabilitation, which will begin almost as soon as the injured man comes out from under the anaesthetic, is what they are terming in the Surgeon General's office "cheer-up work." By every means that can be devised the cripple is to be convinced that his case is not hopeless, that he still has chances of becoming again a useful industrial unit—perhaps a better chance than he has ever had before.

One of the most important means of instilling this vitally important lesson will be through the utilization of "cheer-up men," themselves cripples, who have lost arms, legs or sight, and who have, nevertheless, made good. Plans are complete for the employment of a large corps of these "cheer-up workers"; they are being enlisted through the aid of the Red Cross Institute, the National Association of Manufacturers, insurance companies dealing with industrial accidents, and from the ranks of Canadian and British soldiers who have suffered mutilation in this war and are again self-supporting civilians. Eventually, unless the war comes to a much earlier termination than Washington is figuring on, our own army will provide a supply of "cheer-up men" from the graduates of the reconstruction hospitals.

Lieut. Col. Frank Billings, in Charge of Work of Rehabilitating Cripples.

These workers are to be attached to the base hospitals, the hospital ships that will bring the incapacitated soldiers back to America for treatment, and to the general and special hospitals on this side.

Supplementing the work of the "cheer-up men," whose function is to demonstrate both orally and visually that a cripple is far from useless, will be books, pictures, motion pictures, and other exhibits calculated to inspire the will and stimulate the ambition of the injured man. In the Surgeon General's office a wonderful book is being compiled, under the direction of one of the most famous of American surgeons, in which the life stories of hundreds of maimed and crippled men who have overcome their handicaps are told in simple but convincing fashion. Profusely illustrated, copies of this book will be available for the perusal of every crippled soldier in the hospitals. Motion-picture films showing crippled men who have undergone almost every conceivable form of mutilation, performing useful work for good pay, with and without the use of artificial members, are being prepared by the Red Cross Institute and elsewhere for exhibition to the maimed soldier as early as he is able to see them.

To insure against the habit of idleness, provision is being made for the employment of every crippled soldier at some form of work as soon as he is able to use any of his faculties. Special nurses, male and female, are being trained as "bedside teachers," to give the wounded man a start at employing his faculties before he is able to leave his cot. The things he does at first will necessarily be trivial in their results, but they will be required duties, gauged to the man's capacity and strength, and leading to his future career as a crippled civilian. Thus, the man who has lost his right hand will be taught to use his left for the things he was accustomed to do with his right; the stenographer who has lost a hand will learn to operate a typewriter with one hand—not so difficult a feat as it may seem. As the cripple becomes a convalescent, able to leave his bed, more work will be required of him. By this time he will be on the hospital ship, on his way back to the United States, for every wounded soldier who cannot be quickly restored to active service will be sent back to this country as soon as he can be transported, for further treatment or discharge. On the hospital ship and in the reception hospital on Ellis Island there will be special officials whose duty it will be to ascertain all the available facts about each man's personal ability, previous occupation, earning capacity, social status, and similar data on which to base a judgment as to the particular form of re-education best adapted to his needs.

Fourteen of the general hospitals being constructed by the War Department in as many different sections of the United States are to be used as reconstruction hospitals, where the maimed may be restored to their fullest usefulness. To each will be attached workshops, where at least the rudiments of different trades may be practiced; gardens and farm land for outdoor work, and every possible facility for encouraging the cripple to do his utmost toward self-restoration. Here, too, will be centred the work of the "reconstruction aids," a corps of instructors in physical training, specially trained for the work of drilling crippled men in the fullest use of their remaining muscles, to the end that they may exercise their faculties to the utmost. The degree to which the stump of an arm or a leg may become mobile and useful has been carefully calculated as a result of French experience; it is surprising to a sound man to discover how useful half a forearm, for instance, may become. The corps of reconstruction aids is being recruited from among men and women instructors in gymnastics under the direction of Miss Marguerite Sanderson of Boston.

Art at Home and Abroad

"Portrait de la famille," from the Painting by Edgar Degas, Recently Sold to the Louvre for Over $80,000.

WHEN the sale of that part of the Degas collection consisting of the painter's own works came on this last week in Paris, the "Portrait de la famille" was sold for a sum equivalent to about $80,000, not taking into consideration the amount added for taxes, and went to the Louvre. The picture represents the family of the painter's brother, who is shown seated at his fireside, his wife and two little girls forming a group in the foreground of the composition. Painted with the utmost simplicity and drawn with a precision testifying to the influence of Ingres, it belongs to that early period when Degas, home from Italy and fresh from his impassioned study of the older masters, gave his attention to the life about him for his subject matter, keeping, however, a strict restraint upon his methods of interpretation, and holding to classic tradition as it descended to him through Lamothe and Ingres. At about the same time he painted the "Dame aux raisons dorés" now in Mrs. Gardner's collection and began to make his famous studies of the race course. The "Portrait de la famille" was a "transition picture" revealing clearly the turning of the painter's mind from the past toward a more sensitive modernity, although his relations with the group of young painters, including Monet, Renoir, and Manet were not yet emphasized.

On account of its associations it never left the studio, but its very considerable size, about seven feet in height by eight noble struggle for professional victories that make no emotional appeal. M. Alexandre in the current number of Les Arts does no little service to the memory of Degas, about whom many apocryphal legends have arisen, in presenting his character as it is personally known to his biographer and as it reveals itself in his work at various stages of his long career, without the unwieldy accretions of gossip and unauthentic narrative that destroy the symmetry of the popular image of him.

He introduces his convincing little history with a frank acknowledgment of the line he has taken among the many open to a writer deeply enlisted for the integrity of his subject. "Doubtless," he says, "in bringing together many small characteristics of humor, of prejudice, aversion, vehemence, to which more than one contemporary could bear witness, a by no means amiable portrait of Degas could be constructed, a portrait all the elements in which would be exact, and which as a whole would be absolutely false. It is possible, on the other hand, by taking account only of his aspirations, his efforts, his conquests, his noble rejection of compromise, to construct another which should be magnificent. We prefer to attempt the latter."

Exhibition of Designation Targets.

At the Arden Studios is an exhibition of the particular class of landscape created by the necessities of the present war and used for classroom instruction lery and rifle practice. One hundred and twenty-five designation targets have been supplied through the Art War Relief to sixteen cantonments throughout the United States, and many more are needed.

The artists contributing to the present exhibition are H. Boulton Jones, E. Mabel Clark, Cecilia Beaux, Orlando Rouland, George Elmer Brown, Francis C. Jones, Harry L. Hoffman, Chauncey F. Ryder, Ernest Albert, Louis Berneker, and Colin Campbell Cooper. There is no Government appropriation to cover the work, and these and many other artists are giving their services with devoted zeal. The character of the pictures is, naturally, entirely different from that of a painting made solely for aesthetic pleasure; but the greater the artist's knowledge and skill the more effectively he can turn his brush to these new methods. It is necessary not only to make all detail clear and recognizable, but to emphasize the middle plane of distance and to record the precise formation of the land with all its incidents of houses, fences, trees, bridges, haystacks, &c., from which the soldier may learn quickly to recognize and quickly to describe significant features in a military environment.

The Children's Art Centre in Boston.

In Boston last week was the formal opening of the Children's Art Centre, an enterprise due to the initiative of Fitz Roy Carrington, curator of prints again of a kind to appeal to the insatiable curiosity felt by a child in the animal world, as in the sculptures of F. G. R. Roth, which include an elephant reaching out with his trunk for an apple, a rhinoceros, a bear scratching himself, &c.

There also, however, are fine works by Chester Beach, Paul Manship, and others, as well as stained glass, porcelains, and prints that make no special concession to the limitations of youthful experience, but ask for attention on the ground of sheer beauty and distinction.

Brooklyn Exhibition of Independent Artists.

The Ardsley Studios, under the direction of Hamilton Easter Field, are holding a small exhibition of Independent Artists with the object of getting the public in touch with contemporary art without the intervention of juries. The advantage of the Ardsley Studios, Mr. Field says with justice, "lies largely in the setting, which is that of a normal American home," where the permanent worth of a work of art can be far more easily judged "than when it is exhibited against the incongruous background of our modern shows."

It is rather a gallant little show, conceived in a friendly mood, with inexperienced painters, still surprised at the uncanny tricks their brushes have power to play, hung in close companionship with painters for whom the tricks of the brush are the oldest of old stories.

Not all are living painters. Here is a large "Samoan Landscape," by John La Farge, with a sky of hot, low-hanging clouds, a fisherman balancing his spear as he wades in shallow waters, and on fertile banks the rich colors of South Sea vegetation; not so important a picture in spite of its size as some of the small, brilliant watercolors of the same period, but representing fairly the artist's individual gift of reducing alien civilizations to the common denominator and making the life of the Samoan seem natural and real to the citizen of London or New York.

Near this canvas, with its expression of normal feeling, hang several decadent inventions by Louis G. Bouché. The characterization of the faces often is clever, but there is nothing to be said for the deformations that serve no aesthetic ideal or legitimate purpose. The heavy bodies on little, pointed feet are monstrosities eloquent of disease and without artistic significance. "Boulders in the Brook," by Howard Notman, not only escapes the vices of such modernism, but ignores such virtues as it has in going back to a patient Pre-Raphaelite method, from which something freer and more expressive may in time emerge. Robert Laurent's drawing of a dog and René Piot's organic study of an iris are the other pictures in this middle room.

The East Room has a more varied entertainment to offer. There are landscapes and still life by James Butler, the step-grandson of Monet, who shows more of the Post-Impressionist than Impressionist influence; a backyard scene by Stuart Davis, oddly composed in regular stratification, with unpleasant eccentricities of color; a group of naïve little pictures by Thomas Bodnar that unite to a childlike innocence and impotence of craftsmanship a very promising taste for firm structural lines and pleasant pro-third sunk in a profundity of indifference. The types are well discriminated, and the color scheme, of strong blue with a warm atmospheric gray, is one of great distinction. Two heads by Mr. Field and two or three things by Maurice Sterne are in the entrance hall.

It may be inferred that the exhibition hardly can be called important either from a quantitative or qualitative standpoint; but it is interesting to note how much more important it looks than it is, owing to the extraordinary charm of the surroundings.

The Allied Artists

The Allied Artists of America have for their object, according to their constitution, "the advancement of American art by opening new avenues of opportunity for the exhibition of meritorious works of art, without antagonism toward any existing institution." They are now holding their fifth annual exhibition in the Fine Arts Building, the pictures shown being the choice of the artists themselves, without the intervention of a jury of selection. No antagonism toward any existing institution appears in the exhibition, nine-tenths of the exhibitors having already reached the public through the avenues of academic galleries, and the pictures chosen by them having the familiar stamp of conservative exhibition material.

G. Glenn Newell sends the best of his cattle pictures, "Monarch of All He Surveys," and there are excellent paintings of similar subjects by Edward C. Volkert. George M. Bruestle, Hobart Nichols, Cullen Yates, Gustave Wiegand, Frank A. Bicknell, Paul King, Lester D. Boronda, are among the landscape painters who send characteristic work; Christina Morton has a number of interesting Guadeloupe studies; there are several portraits that have not only the interest of good portraiture, among them Orlando Rouland's portrait of First Lieutenant O. McKaine, U. S. R., of the 367th Infantry; "The Buffaloes," and Lawrence Nelson's "The Man from Montana," for which Private Peter G. Henderson posed. Richard F. Maynard has a brilliant portrait of Count de Kosenka in Boyar costume, the most striking canvas in the exhibition.

The sketch room is an interesting section, although the majority of the exhibits are rather fully developed small pictures, instead of sketches in the implied sense of quick memoranda. Some pages from the sketchbook of Mr. Volkert, however, are in the latter class and have for the student of art a vivid interest. The painter's rapid notations of position and direction, of gestures and movement, show him face to face with his subject and thoroughly interested in its essential aspects. In these pages also are some little compositions that are abridged versions of pictures sold by the painter. The small guide charts, for that is what they amount to, are accompanied with notes as to the owners of the pictures and the dates of sale. It is a habit that should be encouraged among painters, as no amount of written evidence is so valuable in identifying a picture after it has passed through many hands as such a sketch of its composition by the artist.

Museum Activities.

That part of the public which fails to come into direct contact with the Metropolitan Museum has very little idea of the multiplicity of its efforts toward establishing relations with all the people of the city. In the direction of educational work, especially, it has shown its increasing power to attract those who need its help. A present report sent to the Committee on Educational Work indicates something of the importance of what has been done.

The Museum instructors, Mrs. Vaughan and Miss Abbot, report a number of interesting ways in which the schools make use of the Museum opportunities. One high school class in French made fortnightly visits throughout the school year, studying French art from the twelfth century to Rodin. The girls made this study the subject of their conversations in class and of their written exercises. The Supervisor of Drawing in ten public school districts arranged to have the drawing classes visit the Museum regularly for lectures on costume and on furniture design, the children drawing directly from objects in the galleries after listening to a brief talk illustrated by slides.

There are gallery talks for teachers and a monthly talk for special intensive study. The private schools also have made use of the instruction service as heretofore "to give a greater vividness to schoolroom teaching. The class in mediaeval history from Barnard College, about 200 in number, came in groups of twenty during December for a lecture in the galleries on the art of the Middle Ages. A plan of closer affiliation with the college is contemplated.

A number of women's clubs are reached by the Museum, and the Renaissance Art Club of Yonkers is continuing for a second year monthly meetings in the galleries. The children's story hours, which are given by Miss Chandler on Saturday mornings to the children of members, and on Sunday afternoons for the general public, are a favorite feature of the educational program. Over three thousand have attended the Saturday story hours and over five thousand the Sunday hours.

Mr. D'Hervilly gives a lively picture of the variety to be found in the employment of the Museum's possessions for practical uses, ranging from patterns for silk cravats to motion picture features. Miss Davis writes of the lending collections of the Museum, which now include 18,000 lantern slides, besides several thousand photographs, post cards, textile samples, and duplicate casts, and a group of charts and maps for use in the study of history, Greek or Latin. An interesting item in her report concerns the loan of several casts to the School for Defectives on Randall's Island, where a teacher is trying to bring out any latent creative power and appreciation of the beautiful that may exist in the unfortunate pupils.

Finally, Miss Robinson writes of the activities of the Information Desk, and notes among other things that, even with the many demands for contributions of money assailing the public from every side, the sale of handbooks and photographs has not diminished, but, on the contrary, has increased.

The report, with its necessarily restricted comment and compressed subject matter, hardly does justice to the vitality of the work going on in the Museum. No visitor making a systematic survey of its arrangements for aiding teachers and pupils and the vaguely searching public at large can fail to be impressed by its enormous power for stimulus in the community.

San Francisco Prizes.

The prizes offered in the current forty-second annual exhibition of the San Francisco Art Association, now being held in the Palace of Fine Arts, San Francisco, have been awarded to the following artists by the Jury of Awards, composed of Leo Lentelli, E. Spencer Macky, Gottardo Piazzoni, and Hermann Rosse:

The $300 Emanuel Walter Purchase Prize was awarded to Henry V. Poor for his painting entitled "Winter Landscape," which thereby becomes the property of the Emanuel Walter Collection; the Charles Templeton Crocker Prize of $100 was awarded to Clark Hobart for his "Portrait of Mrs. Francis Young," while the gold medal awarded in painting was won by Joseph Raphael for his beautiful landscape entitled "The Willow Pond." The silver medal for painting was awarded to Armin Hansen for his painting entitled "The Noon Hour," and the bronze medal in the same class was awarded "The Lacquer Screen," by Anne M. Bremer. In the water-color class the silver medal has been awarded Godfrey Fletcher for his landscape entitled "Moss Landing." In the graphic section the silver medal was awarded Armin Hansen for his drawing of a shipyard entitled "War Baby." In the sculpture class the gold medal was won by Ralph Stackpole for his beautiful crouching "Figure of a Fountain."

Corcoran Gallery of Art Announcement.

The following notice has been received from the Corcoran Gallery of Art:

"In view of the existing situation resulting from the war in which our country is now engaged, the Trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art announce, with deep regret, that the Seventh Exhibition of Contemporary American Oil Paintings, which was scheduled to open in this gallery in December, 1918, has been postponed.

"This action was taken by the Trustees for the reason that, as the railroad facilities of the country are at present urgently needed for the transportation of foodstuffs and munitions for our soldiers and sailors, and of fuel for our ships, factories, and for private consumption, they feel that it would not be proper, under these conditions, to add to the already heavy burdens of the public carriers by providing for an exhibition which would necessitate the shipment of many hundreds of paintings from all sections of the country.

"The biennial exhibitions will be resumed as soon as the Trustees feel that conditions warrant, and due notice will then be given.

"The Hon. William A. Clark has generously offered to donate the sum of $5,000 for prize awards whenever the Trustees may deem it expedient to hold the next exhibition."

Conspicuous nose pores

How to reduce them

Complexions otherwise flawless are often ruined by conspicuous nose pores.

In such cases the small muscular fibres of the nose have become weakened and do not keep the pores closed as they should be. Instead, these pores collect dirt, clog up and become enlarged.

To reduce enlarged nose pores: wring a cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Then finish by rubbing the nose for thirty seconds with a lump of ice.

Notice the improvement the very first treatment makes—a promise of what its steady use will do.

Do not expect to change in a week, however, a condition resulting from years of neglect. But use this treatment persistently. It will gradually reduce the enlarged pores until they are inconspicuous.

You will find a 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment and for general cleansing use for this time. Get a cake today. Woodbury's is for sale at drug stores and toilet goods counters everywhere throughout the United States and Canada.

Write today for a week's size cake

For 5c we will send you a trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap large enough to last for a week of this Woodbury treatment, together with the booklet "A Skin You Love to Touch," which gives the proper treatment for all of the commoner skin troubles.

For 12c we will send you the treatment booklet and samples of Woodbury's Facial Soap, Facial Cream and Facial Powder. Send today to The Andrew Jergens Co., 5,109 Spring Grove Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

How Clean? How Cold? How Dry? How Economical?

Decide these questions before you select a Refrigerator. If the comparisons you make are thorough and conclusive, you will select a

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

The lining of fused porcelain-steel (a single piece in all but the largest models) is far different from ordinary enamel paint. It will not crack or chip. The corners are round—no place for food particles or dirt to lodge. The drain is in front where it can be cleansed easily and frequently without removing the contents of the Refrigerator.

The Syphon System of rapid air circulation from ice to food compartments, and the 10-layer, heat-resisting walls (including Flaxlinum, the exclusive Bohn insulation), hold the temperature very low.

Because of the Syphon System, no moisture condenses on the food. Condensing moisture contaminates foods, causing butter or cream to smell and taste like bananas, onions, cheese, etc. Foods come fresh and fragrant from a Bohn Syphon. You can strike matches on the lining—it is so dry.

The original cost comes back to you in reduced ice-bills. Superior insulation and the Syphon System both contribute to ice economy.

Let us demonstrate these and other Bohn points. Bohn Syphon and other Bohn Refrigerators are shown here in great variety, at prices from $19.00 up. If you cannot call, write for a catalog.

NEVER cut the cuticle. Cutting makes rough, ragged edges and causes hangnails

Notice what an improvement even one Cutex manicure makes!

The wrong and the right way to manicure

WHEN the cuticle is trimmed or cut, the skin about the base of the nail becomes dry and ragged. It rougha up, forms hangnails and makes your whole hand unattractive.

All specialists agree that in caring for the nails, your effort should be to keep the cuticle unbroken.

Cutex was scientifically prepared to meet the need for a harmless cuticle remover. It makes it possible for you to have shapely, symmetrical nails without clipping or cutting. It is absolutely harmless.

Send for the trial manicure set offered below and see what an improvement the very first Cutex manicure makes.

(Photo © White Studio, N. Y.) Elsie Janis says: "I am delighted with Cutex. I have just finished my nails and find it most wonderful"

How to manicure the right way

Wrap a little absorbent cotton around the end of an orange stick (both cotton and orange stick come in the Cutex package) and dip it into the bottle. Carefully work the stick around the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle. Almost at once you can wipe off the dead surplus cutiele. Then rinse the fingera in clear water.

A little Cutex Nail White, applied underneath the nails, removes all stains, leaves nail tips snowy white. Finish with Cutex Nail Polish.

Until you have used Cutex, you eannet rea ize what a great improvement even one application makes. See how quiekly you can give your nails the well-groomed shapeliness everyone admires.

Cutex, the cuticle remover, comes in 30c, 60c and $1.25 bottles. Cutex Nail White is 30c. Cutex Nail Polish in cake, paste, powder, liquid or stick form is also 30c. Get it at drug or department stores.

Army foot inspection

Would your feet disqualify you?

Fig. A — Fig. B

WHETHER you are subject to military service or not, you are naturally interested to know how you measure up to the new physical standards of the army, for these will be the standards in industry everywhere after the war.

Here is one test you can make yourself.

Tomorrow morning, as you step from your bath on to the bath mat, notice the mark left by your wet foot. See whether or not you have flat-foot.

If the imprint is apparently incomplete as in figure "A," it shows that the arch in your instep is normal and forms a bridge that holds the inner part of your foot off the ground.

But if the imprint is complete, figure "B," it indicates that the arch of your instep has been broken down, so that your foot lies flat on the ground with no "give," no "spring" in it.

Fallen arch, or "flat-foot" as this deformity is more often called, is generally considered harmless enough, so common as to seem almost normal. But thousands of volunteers for the army have been rejected on account of this trouble.

Hard pavements blamed for many ailments

Flat-foot has increased alarmingly since hard stone pavements were first introduced.

In a soft walk, the foot shapes the ground on an unyielding walk, the pavement shapes the foot.

The continual pounding with the whole weight of the body on hard, unyielding pavements, weakens these natural springs of the foot—elasticity of step is lost, and the foot is gradually flattened out.

This constant strain on the arches, and stretching of the ligaments, results in extreme tenderness and marked pains throughout the foot, and muscles of the leg as well.

Don't pound away your health on hard sidewalks. Save your system from the jolts and jars that tend to break down health. O'Sullivan's Heels absorb the shocks — they act as springy cushions between your heels and hard floors and pavements.

Because of our special process, O'Sullivan's Heels combine the greatest durability with the greatest resilience. They are made of perfect heel material.

Buy your new shoes with O'Sullivan's Heels already attached. Good dealers sell the latest style shoes with these heels already attached. Have O'Sullivan's put on all your shoes at once. Every day you delay putting them on you are imposing serious strain on the structure of your feet, and a needless tax on energy.

Insist on O'Sullivan's—avoid the disappointment of substitutes.

THE foundation planting that lends the last finishing touch of charm and "smiling" beauty to this picture consists of large Japanese Yews, Dwarf Box, Andromeda Floribunda, Dwarf Arborvitae, Dwarf Spruce, Yucca, English Ivy, and Wisteria Vine—mixed with a liberal portion of taste and landscape skill. It's so easy to make mistakes in foundation planting that we are particularly anxious to call attention to our many years of experience in this specialty of ours, and to the fact that an order for foundation plants gives you the benefit of this accumulated experience without added charge. The first Silk Gloves created a Sensation

A REIGNING beauty inaugurated the fashion forty years ago. "My dear! A silk glove—it's unheard of!" her friends exclaimed.

But women were quick to see the advantages of these cool, dainty gloves for spring and summer wear.

Kayser's were the first to make silk gloves—and ever since the early '80s, Kayser Silk Gloves have been worn by women of fashion.

Kayser's originated and guaranteed the double fingertips which give double service.

For forty years, American women have preferred Kayser Silk Gloves to all others.

Today they are better than ever in all the points that make a silk glove serviceable and worth having. Kayser Silk Gloves fit better, wear better and are therefore more economical than other silk gloves.

Look for the name in the hem. All stores are showing them. Your dealer recommends them to you. Purchase your gloves for spring now and look for the name Kayser in the hem.

NEW FASHIONS DEMAND NEW CORSETS

THE backbone of fashion is the corset bone. And how important is that boning! It is one of the unseen things that make your corset slenderly graceful and pliant. The boning of R & G Corsets is a feature which has made these corsets famous.

The R & G Corset shown in the illustration above—Model B 512—is especially designed for the average figure. It is adequately boned but without heaviness. While it gently restrains excess flesh, there is no sense of undue restraint. Made in fine quality pink coutille.

Hair Beauty
Hair Duty

HAIR-DUTY is the little hand-maiden of Hair-Beauty.

If you have been faithful to your hair, it is well. If not . . . . After a long time or a short time will come Hair-Duty. She will say:

"What have you done with your gift . . . . your gift of Hair-Beauty?"

She is not deceived. She knows the neglected look. She knows each hair is calling for Beauty that has gone. "Where my lustre? My rich hues? My softness as of a dove's wing?"

Listen to Smirnoff—Smirnoff of Petrograd:

"From the rich pines of Russia I have drawn the secret of Beauty your hair cries for. I have brought my secret to America. Now is my shampoo made in America. . . . Smirnoff's Russian Shampoo Powder."

Open the black and gold Smirnoff package. Just enough in each individual envelope for one shampoo . . . . just enough for your dark hair sable-black, or your brown hair or auburn or golden or flaxen. Blend this pure powder with hot water. See how quickly in your hair this shampoo whips into a deep, deep lather . . . . how thoroughly it cleanses . . . . how the scalp tissues respond with new life.

Now softly that silken hair ensnares a new beauty, the healthful, richer hues of youth . . . . clear as bright crystal . . . . healthful as the pines . . . . soft as a Russian Spring shining to the sky.

It is so easy. So, so many shops are proud to sell Smirnoff's Russian Shampoo Powder.

ALLIES WON'T USE AMERICAN ARMY UNTIL IT IS COMPLETE; MEANTIME AWAIT IN CONFIDENCE FOE'S IMMINENT ATTACK; GERMAN GUNS ARE POUNDING THE LINES AT MANY POINTS

RUSSIA BEGS GERMANY TO END ALL HOSTILITY

Says Captures of Territory Violate Treaty and Cause Great Unrest.

DANGER FROM FLEET DENIED

Tchitcherin Gives Assurances Ships Will Not Attack Port Foe Threatens to Capture.

PLEADS FOR UKRAINIANS

Frontier of Their Own Country Closed to Those in Russia by Germans.

LONDON, May 12.—In a wireless message to Ambassador Joffe at Berlin, the Russian Foreign Minister, M. Tchitcherin, instructs the Ambassador to "try to obtain from Berlin cessation of every kind of hostility." The dispatch adds:

"Captures of our territory are in violation of the state of peace with Germany, and are causing great unrest among the masses of our population."

M. Joffe also is instructed to notify Germany that part of the Russian Black Sea fleet which has left Sebastopol is now at Novorossysk, on the east coast of the Black Sea, which port the Germans are threatening to capture on the ground that their own warships are in danger of attack by the Russians. M. Tchitcherin says the Russian warships there will make no such attack.

A Reuter dispatch filed at Moscow on May 2 says that Germany announced that all armed vessels in the Black Sea, including any ships on which are sailors of the Russian Black Sea fleet, would be treated as enemy warships. The reason assigned for this action was an attack said to have been made on a German submarine in the Black Sea.

Other wireless messages sent from the Russian Government to Berlin make disclosures regarding German methods in Russia. One complaint deals with a message, received by the Ukrainian colony in Petrograd from Ukraine, in which it is stated that the frontier has been closed by the Germans to all mainland. The evacuation of Ukrainians from Russia is being carried out by means of wagons under terrible conditions, particularly for the sick and for children. It could be effected easily by the River Dnieper, the message says, but this route has been closed to Ukrainians by the Germans.

Count von Mirbach, German Ambassador to Russia, to whom the Ukrainians applied for assistance, declared his inability to do anything. The Russian Government begs the German Foreign Office to bring pressure to bear on the Government, because the needs of the Ukraninian refugees are very great.

Another complaint relates to the evacuation of German war prisoners, which is being carried out within the limits of practical possibilities. It is said the exchange of invalided prisoners of war, according to the Petrograd agreement, does not mean an exchange per capita. In view of this condition, the Russian Government begs that the Russians at Vilna be not detained.

STOCKHOLM, May 12.—The British Consul at Helsingfors has sent to the Finnish Senate a proposal regarding the provisional recognition of the Finnish Government by Great Britain under certain conditions, a dispatch from Helsingfors to the Tidningen reports.

It is stipulated that British subjects arrested in Finland be released, and that Finland furnish guarantees for the maintenance of neutrality, and grant free passage through the country for British subjects and goods and full rights to navigate Finland's territorial waters.

If these conditions are complied with Great Britain will send a Chargé d'Affaires to Finland. Final adjustment of the relations between the countries is to be left to the peace conference.

SAYS TROTZKY HANDED POLAND TO GERMANY

Alleged Secret Showing Betrayal Published by Newspaper in Switzerland.

GENEVA, May 12.—Poland is handed over to Germany economically, politically, and militarily, according to the terms of a secret treaty reached at Brest-Litovsk between a delegation of the Russian Government, headed by Leon Trotzky, and German representatives, according to the Gazette of Lausanne. The newspaper guarantees the authenticity of the treaty, consisting of seven clauses, which it prints.

By the fifth clause, for example, Russia is bound to support at a peace conference the contention that the Polish question concerns Germany alone and is not an international one.

Charles Goes to See Kaiser; Honors Burian for New Treaty

AMSTERDAM, May 12.—A Vienna dispatch reports that Emperor Charles, who has been on a visit to the Italian front, departed on Friday for German Great Headquarters. He was accompanied by Baron Burian, Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, and Field Marshal Arz von Strausseenburg, Austrian Chief of Staff.

Emperor Charles has made Baron Burian a Hungarian Count in recognition of his services in connection with the conclusion of peace with Rumania.

ZURICH, May 12.—Negotiations which will decide the future relations of Germany and Austria-Hungary will be discussed by Baron Burian, the Austrian Foreign Minister, on his visit to German Headquarters, says a Vienna dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung. These negotiations may be characterized as a pragmatic alliance—a military and customs union.

A two-thirds majority in the Reichsrath is required for sanction of this alliance, and the newspaper says that it is doubtful whether this can be obtained.

NEW RESTRICTIONS PUT ON EXPORTS

Allied Missions in America Hereafter Will Pass Upon Applications for Licenses.

TO LIMIT SUPPLY TO NEED

Purpose Is Further to Conserve Labor and Materials and Add Tonnage to Military Fleet.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—In order further to conserve materials and labor and add tonnage to the fleet carrying men and munitions to Europe, the War Trade Board has arranged to have the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium pass upon the advisability of releasing all proposed exports before licenses are granted to shippers. The new rules will become effective on Wednesday and no applications for licenses will thereafter be considered unless the official representatives of the nations named believe that the shipments are essential to the war program.

The War Industries Board and the Food Administration will work in close co-operation with the War Trade Board and the agents of the allied Governments. These organizations must give their sanction when shipments of foodstuffs or other materials over which they have supervision are involved, even though licenses have been granted. This program will give the Food Administration and the War Industries Board absolute control of the commodities which they believe should be conserved in this country.

The new plan will in effect set up an international court to determine commercial policies and make possible a survey which will be invaluable in distributing the resources of the United States among the principal nations with which it is allied.

The announcement today was the result of consultation by the War Trade Board with the Food Administration, the War Industries Board, and the missions of the European allies involved. An official statement said the step was taken "for the purpose of preventing the useless consumption of materials and labor in making articles for export which for the present may not be exported and for the purpose of saving tonnage by prohibiting the exportation of articles which have not been recommended by the Government of the country of destination as being necessary for their essential requirements."

The new rules do not cover shipments to the colonies, possessions, and protectorates of the nations. These instructions are issued:

Text of the Instructions.

"On and after May 15, 1918, applicants, before filing applications for license to export any commodity to the above-named countries, must obtain thereon the written approval of the mission in the United States of the country to which the exportation is to be made. To secure this approval, applicants should forward their applications, duly executed, in triplicate, with proper supplemental sheets attached thereto, including Supplemental Sheet X-11 or X-12, as may be required, to:

"The British War Mission, Munsey Building, Washington, D. C., for shipments to the United Kingdom.

"The French High Commission, 1954 Columbia Road, N. W., Washington, D. C., for shipments to France.

"The Italian High Commission, 1,712 New Hampshire Avenue, N. W., Washington, D. C., for shipments to Italy.

"The Belgian Commission, Room 202, Council National Defense Building, Washington, D. C., for shipments to Belgium.

FIRE PRESAGES BIG ATTACK

German Guns Bombard Allied Line from Flanders to the Somme.

GAS SHELLS USED FREELY

Trappist Monastery on Mont des Cats a Special Target for Foe.

KIN OF KAISER DIED THERE

Tomb of Max of Hesse, Who Fell in 1914, to Remain Secret Till After War.

By PHILIP GIBBS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WAR CORRESPONDENTS' HEADQUARTERS, Sunday, May 12.—Since yesterday afternoon the German artillery firing has been more heavy over many sectors of the front from Flanders to the Somme, and they seem to have put down an intense barrage of the British lines at Ridge Wood, near Ypres, and also to have shelled some positions in the Lens area and on the high ground at Houzincourt, Hennencourt, and other places. There has also been shelling of various valleys in these districts, and ruined villages like Fonquevillers, near Hebuterne, with poison gas.

They are methods adopted before attack, but by bursts of intense fire at many parts of the front the enemy is probably trying to confuse the Allies as to the whereabouts of his next offensive efforts. Long-range guns are firing into towns and villages behind the lines, such as Hazebrouck, and hamlets this side of Corbie, in one of which yesterday they killed one civilian and wounded another, and Amiens, which is too close to the German lines to be left in peace by men who have no mercy on the fair cities of France.

Mont des Cats a Special Target.

There is a hill in Flanders upon which the enemy has turned his guns of late, and a building there which he desires to destroy. The hill is Mont des Cats, which looks across to Kemmel and Bailleul, and the building is a great monastery where Trappist monks lived until Kemmel fell and German guns moved closer to them.

I hate to think that it may go the same way as the hospice at Wytschaete and the convent at Locre, because that great building on the hill was always in the background of the scene of the war in Flanders. One gazed from the flat landscape to its misty height, where its pointed and many windows above the walls caught the glint of any sun about, and was made mystical like the vision of a dream castle where King Arthur and his knights might dwell.

To this monastery in Autumn, 1914, came riding up a long column of German cavalry, and an officer with a revolver in his hand kicked open the door of the chapel where the monks were reciting their office before the altar. The old Abbott told me that not one of his monks turned his head at the intrusion, nor showed by any sign fear because the enemy was at the gate; and after tramping up the middle of the nave the sight of those cowled figures with heads bent in prayer seemed to abash the German officer, and presently without a word he turned and went out.

Other bodies of German cavalry passed over Mont des Cats, and sometimes their officers were civil to the monks and sometimes not, and one who was not, arrested the Father Abbot and shut him up in a cell with a sentry outside. Then some more cavalry came up the winding road, and they were English.

The Germans sat on their horses under cover of a high red brick wall which goes round by an old mill, five centuries old they tell me, on the crest of the hill, and as the first English patrol approached they fired and unseated some of the men. There was a skirmishing fight, which the Trappist monks watched from their windows, and bullets scarred their walls and men and horses lay wounded or dead on the slopes.

The Germans were driven down into Meteren, but left one dying man behind, who was brought into the monastery and tended in his last hours by the Abbot himself. This German cavalry officer was a young man, hardly more than a boy, with many ribbons on his breast. It was Prince Max of Hesse, of the Kaiser's blood. He spoke several times before he died, sending last messages to his people and thanking the Abbot for his courtesy.

That night his body was carried down the hill for burial by the parish priest in the valley below. The priest buried the German princeling secretly, and would not reveal this secret when the Kaiser sent word to know the whereabouts of his cousin's grave.

"Tell the Kaiser," he answered back, "that I will let him know the Prince's burial place when there are no more German soldiers in Belgium and when restitution has been made for the crimes against our people."

To this day there are few people who know where Prince Max lies buried, and they will not tell.

After that cavalry fight Mont des Cats was left in peace, but always on the near edge of war, so that the Abbot and his monks looked out for three years upon the sweep of shell-fire which never ceased around the Ypres salient, and up to their slopes there flowed waves of wounded, who were tended there by British medical officers and orderlies, who established a field hospital within the walls.

Then a few weeks ago the edge of the war came closer, very close, so that all the fields about were being upheaved by shells and others came bursting on the hill. Today and yesterday Mont des Cats has been under fire again.

Foe Must Act Soon.

Saturday, May 11.—The enemy still stays in his lines, and even his gunning has during the last twenty-four hours slackened down; except for bursts of heavy fire here and there.

Does it mean that the German high command, acknowledging secretly the failure of their stupendous effort which began on March 21 and was brought to a check on the Somme and in Flanders, have now decided to cut their losses by remaining on the defensive? If any one thinks so he is living without knowledge of the realities. Nothing but a revolt in Germany or in their armies here—a revolt against this colossal shambles of their manhood—will cause the German command to abandon the desperate hope that they may still smash the allied armies on the western front, and in that hope they are going on.

Quiet Before the Storm.

I believe what is happening now behind the German line is the preparation of another violent blow by masses of men and guns. It may be that where the front is most quiet the menace is greatest. It is the quietude which preceded the storm of the first phase of their offensive. Along many parts of the front yesterday it was the British guns that were doing most of the business. The German gunners answered back hardly at all.

They were not turning the other cheek out of a spirit of martyrdom and Christian charity. No doubt they were just economizing their ammunition, filling up their dumps and unloading stores of shells from light railways for the day's work which may come very soon.

I saw their black shrapnel bursting very high in the sunny sky, just as at St. Quentin before the big assault—just odd bursts, too high to kill or hurt. What did they mean? Perhaps a study of wind variation.

Here and there along the front stray shells were falling in an apparently aimless way by the side of a road or through the roof of a ruined house. A silly sort of game, one might think, without any plan or idea behind it. Not necessarily. It may be the work of gunners registering on points which, when the time comes, they hope to smother under their fire.

Those are things one can see. What one cannot see, but what one may be sure is taking place behind the enemy lines, is the concentration of those divisions which are still undamaged by battle, and the reorganization of divisions whose gaps torn by the allied gunfire and machine gun fire and rifle fire are being filled up by drafts from

Great Allied Food Pool Proposed by Great Britain

LONDON, Monday, May 13.—The Government purposes to place under the control of the Food Ministry the purchase and production of food, so that the stocks may be assured and distribution made more equitable, says The Daily Mail.

"It is felt that by arresting competition in various markets," the newspaper continues, "prices will be reduced for the benefit of consumers and rationing made easier. Andrew Weir, Surveyor General of the food supply at the War Office, has been invited to co-operate, owing to his great experience in the buying of food in the world's markets and shipping it.

"The Government has been conferring with the allied powers, with a view to arranging a combination of interests, so that meat, grain, and other essential foodstuffs can be bought for joint account and placed under one control. Information concerning the plan probably will be given to Parliament the coming week."

ALLIES HAD TO CHOOSE

And Decide to Use Our Army When Complete and Self-supporting.

FOCH'S STRATEGY TELLING

Enemy's Hurling of Masses at Line Has Nearly Exhausted His Reserves.

NEW ONSLAUGHT IS NEAR

But Entente Leaders Are Certain That Foe's Defeat Is Inevitable.

OTTAWA, May 12.—So confident is the Entente of its ability to withstand any drive the Germans can launch that it has been decided not to use the American army until it becomes a complete and powerful force, according to a cable summary of operations on the western front received tonight from the War Committee of the British Cabinet.

"The position now is," said the summary, "that the Germans, determined to concentrate every available unit on one enormous offensive are draining their country dry to force a decision before it is too late, while the Entente are so confident that, having been given the choice of a small immediate American army for defense or waiting till they are reinforced by a complete, powerful, self-supporting American army, they have chosen the latter.

"To the sledge-hammer use of masses of men by the enemy the Allies are opposing the strategy of meeting the blow with the smallest force capable of standing up to the shock, while keeping the strongest reserve possible.

"Troops on the wings are permitted to give ground within limits whenever the enemy has been made to pay a greater price than the ground is worth, the whole aim being to reduce the enemy to such a state of exhaustion that our reserve, at the right moment, can restore the situation.

"In the present operations the British Army has withatood many times its own weight of enemy masses. It has retired slowly, exacting the fullest price.

"Meanwhile, Foch holds the bulk of the French in reserve, sending units only to points hard pressed. This strategy has justified itself in that in three weeks it has seen the enemy brought to a standstill without a single strategic objective being fulfilled, and with losses so immense that his reserve is in danger of proving inadequate to his policy.

"The German commander, seeing how nearly he is delivering himself to the allied reserve, has been compelled to accept temporary failure and call a halt. His position is tactically exposed in two dangerous salients on water-logged ground.

"His countrymen are dangerously dissatisfied at the immense price paid for his failure to terminate their sufferings. His allies are on the verge of quarreling, and daily exhibit their growing dislike and distrust of the taskmaster who robs them of their lives and food.

"His reserves have nearly reached complete exhaustion. Those of the Franco-British are still in being, while the American preparations develop. The time draws closer when defeat is inevitable. Therefore, he must renew the offensive. His preparations proceed feverishly, but it takes months to properly organize such an offensive. He must be satisfied with what he can do in weeks. We may, therefore, expect a renewed furious onslaught before long. The enemy is so committed to his strategical plans that we may await his main blow on the Arras-Amiens front, while necessity compels him to try to improve his position in the Lys sector.

"The Allies may have complete confidence in the result. For the enemy the issue is a desperate endeavor to avoid defeat: for the Allies the issue is only that of victory deferred. The

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 12, (Associated Press.)—The Seicheprey salient shows sign of again becoming active. The enemy last night and this morning deluged the place with machine-gun bullets.

On the same front the American patrols found a number of German bodies in advanced enemy trenches, where they had probably been left in the heavy American bombardment on the night of May 4.

American patrols entered the enemy lines in the sector south of Verdun, but did not encounter resistance.

Official reports of the German losses in the Seicheprey battle, according to a prisoner recently captured, give 600 killed, wounded, and missing.

In the Luneville aector the patrols yesterday morning established the fact that the hamlet of Ancerviller has been abandoned by the enemy. The Germans had not even attempted to occupy shell holes in the salient, which was recently torn up by our artillery.

FRENCH SEE ODDS AGAINST FOE NOW

Believe That He Must Attack in a Desperate Effort for a Decision.

INFERIOR IN MAN-POWER

At a Disadvantage Also in Aircraft and Artillery, but Afraid to Delay.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, May 12.—It is the impression here that the great German attack cannot be long delayed. The general opinion which THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent has gathered in the course of conversations on the subject is that the main drive will come north of Amiens. It is believed that secondary attacks in considerable force will be made with the object of occupying the attention of the French troops and preventing them from moving to the support of their allies.

It is worth noting that in the whole of this war the German policy has been to attack what is believed to be the weakest spot. In Rumania, Serbia, and Russia—everywhere—Germany has followed this plan. Her commanders seem to have the idea that by overwhelming the weaker members of the alliance they can bring the rest to the point of seeking peace.

According to that great master of the art of war, Napoleon, such a policy is useless. It was the cardinal feature of his campaigns that he first attacked and defeated the strongest of his opponents, with the result that the others fell easy victims to his arms.

No Chance of Surprise Now.

The Germans attack what they think is the weakest point, and, perhaps, as in the recent battle, favored by circumstances, they gain a certain advantage. What happens? The French come immediately to the aid of the British and re-establish the situation. That was the case when the Germans had the great initial advantage of surprise. Now that that factor is no longer possible, and now that, above all, Foch is supreme commander of all the allied forces, with power to move French, British, or American divisions about the war chess board as occasion demands, the enemy has little chance of again piercing the line and upsetting even a single one of the allied armies.

Yet, despite the desperate odds against them, it is likely that the German leaders will make one more savage attempt to win a decisive victory. All available indications show that they are assembling their utmost possible strength for the coming effort. "He wants to end it" is the expression one hears daily. (A French soldier always speaks of the enemy in the singular: "Le boche"—never "they" or "les boches.")

Yesterday I visited the camp in which are confined the German prisoners captured in the most recent fighting. I talked with a German who had spent five years as a pastry cook in Brooklyn. He boasted that the war would end within three months with a German victory, and when asked the reason for his belief replied: "Because the Kaiser, Hindenburg, and Ludendorff say so."

I asked whether he shared this implicit faith in the German leaders. He shrugged his shoulders and answered: "Anyway, the German people, the army and civilians alike, believe it, and that is what counts after all."

The impression conveyed by this conversation and by other information

French Believe Germans Hope to Gain Moral Effect by Its Capture.

BIG OFFENSIVE NARROWED

Bombardment of Trappist Monastery Apparently Due to Fear of Observation Post.

By G. H. PERRIS.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE FRENCH FORCES IN FLANDERS, May 11.—I happened to be at the foot of Cats Mountain Thursday afternoon. German eight-inch guns were pounding the summit and particularly the Trappist monastery, which they presumably took for one of the French observation posts. This modern abbey—it is less than a century old—was a vast structure spreading over the crest of the hill, and the white-robed fathers, whose rule is silence, were only recently persuaded to leave it.

The mount is of the same height as its neighbor, Mount Cassel, about 520 feet, and these two are the highest points of the chain that covers the Ypres salient, flanks the way to Hazebrouck and St. Omer, and overlooke the plain for many miles around. The front is about three miles away to the south. All around us the country threw back hot sunshine in a riot of greenery.

Monastery Torn by Shells.

Suddenly the rich calm was rent by a terrific explosion in the north wing of the monastery, and a brown cloud of smoke, earth, and debris burst upward to the sky. Thereafter shell followed shell in rapid succession, and with the accuracy that was possible on a point so well mapped.

Soon two delicate spires had fallen, the roofs were in flames and broken walls gaped to the blue heavens. Another shrine of peace had gone.

There was nothing new in this spectacle and nothing of the least military importance, for the crest of the hills three miles behind the lines are not occupied and no bombardment can prevent this or another hill from being used as an observatory, but I could not help thinking again of the horrible character of the struggle which cannot even spare a Christian hermitage.

Everything points to the imminence of a fresh enemy offensive, and to its chief pressure falling in the north. The Ypres salient must indeed be a strong temptation. Amid the doubts and difficulties that are clouding the German horizon, its capture would be magnified into a first-class victory, even if it led to a no more substantial sequel.

Not to Hold Ypres for Sentiment.

I know nothing of the intentions of the allied command in this regard, but every soldier knows that Ypres has been defended for three and a half years rather for moral than purely military reasons. The Allied have proved their loyalty in holding this ruined corner of Belgium. Now that a climax of the war has come, only bedrock military considerations can prevail. If men are spent to hold Ypres it will be for hard reasons and not for any sentiment.

Up to now, despite its successes, the Hindenburg offensive has shown a falling scale of power. The first stage, beginning March 21, covered a front of about fifty miles and attained a depth of forty miles without

ALLIED GAINS NEAR KEMMEL

French Take Hill 44 and Capture Over 100 Germans

GUNS BUSY ON A WIDE FRONT

Germans Bombarding Albert, Loos, and Ypres Sectors and Lines Southeast of Amiens.

SOUTHERN ATTACK CHECKED

French Repulse Them Near Orvillers-Sorel, Inflicting Heavy Losses and Taking Prisoners.

LONDON, May 12. — Artillery engagements were the only events of importance today on the British and French fronts. The German guns were active to the south of Albert, east of Loos, and near Voormezeele, on the Ypres front. The Paris War Office tonight reports spirited artillery activity south of the Avre, where, near Mailly-Raineval, the firing was heavy last night.

The French troops north of Kemmel village yesterday improved their positions in a local operation, capturing the important Hill 44 and an adjoining farm, and taking more than 100 German prisoners.

The night report from Field Marshal Haig says:

With the exception of artillery activity on both sides there is nothing to report.

Following is the day report of the British War Office:

In a successful local operation yesterday French troops improved their positions north of Kemmel village and captured over 100 prisoners.

A hostile raiding party was repulsed yesterday morning near the Ypres-Comines Canal. We secured a few prisoners. Several prisoners and machine guns were captured by us during the night in patrol encounters in the neighborhood of Meteren.

The hostile artillery was active last night and early this morning in the Ancre sector, south of Albert, on the forward positions east of Loos and south of Voormezeele.

The official statement on aerial operations, given out tonight, says:

On Saturday, except for a short period of clearness in one sector, enabling reconnoissance and bombing, the whole front was enveloped in mist throughout the day. One hostile machine was brought down in the air fighting. Two of ours are missing. Three other German machines were brought down Friday, in addition to the eight previously reported.

Gain on the Vyverbeek.

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE, May 12, (Associated Press.)—An important section of high ground near the Vyverbeek River, north of Kemmel, has been captured by the French in a strong attack. Both Hill 44 and Goddezone Farm, which lie between La Clytte and Vierstraat, were stormed and occupied, thereby giving the French positions which had been a bone of contention for many days.

The battle for Hill 44 was the outcome of the German attack on May 8. When the Germans assaulted, the Allies were holding the elevation. Bitter fighting ensued all day long, and the Germans in the course of time gained possession of the hill. The British almost immediately organized a counterattack and forced the enemy out. The next day the Germans again drove forward. They made such a heavy assault that they again captured the hill, which they held until yesterday.

No other infantry action of importance has occurred in the last twenty-four hours. Raids and minor operations have been continued by both sides, and the artillery has been exceedingly busy at many points. The German gunners have been pounding the back areas hard, and in the last twenty-four hours great quantities of gas shells have been thrown by long-range guns.

Prisoners recently captured say that the losses of the Germans in their attack between Voormezeele and La Clytte on May 8 were heavy. Especially severe casualties were inflicted by the allied machine guns, which were worked to the last minute. One prisoner said he saw rapid-firers shooting into the advanced German lines at a range of about four yards. The allied artillery and rifle fire also took a heavy toll.

Considerable disorganization was caused behind the German lines because the gas from their gas shells blew back over their territory and forced them to don gas masks. Fortunately for the enemy, the gas was only irritant, not lethal.

An interesting entry has been found in the diary of a German candidate officer. Writing at Calx, on the southern battlefront, on April 22, he said that an attack which had been planned to take place previously had been delayed because a German naval division had pillaged Albert and created disorder.

French Repulse Fee at Orvillers.

PARIS, May 12.—A German attack last night on the positions recently won by the French near Orvillers-Sorel, on the southern side of the Picardy battlefront, broke down with severe losses, the War Office announced this afternoon. There was heavy artillery fighting yesterday near Mailly-Raineval, on the battleline southeast of Amiens, and also on the Verdun front; and the gun duels on the Amiens front south of the Avre continued today, according to the night report, which says:

The artillery activity was quite spirited in the region south of the Avre, but there was no infantry action.

On May 10, despite the bad weather, our pursuit airplanes displayed activity. Twe German machines were brought down, and eight were seriously damaged. On May It a German captive balloon was set afire by our pilots.

On May 10 and 11 our bombing machines dropped 7,000 kilos of projectiles on railway stations, depôts, and cantonments of the enemy, notably in the regions of Neyon, Chauny, and Flavy-le-Martel. At this last mentioned place several fires were obeerved.

Following is the day report:

There was rather violent artillery fighting in the region west of Mailly-Raineval.

A German attack on eur new positions northweet of Orvillers-Sorel met with a complete check. Our fire inflicted serious losses on the Germans, who left prisoners in our hands.

The artillery fighting was spirited on the right bank of the Meuse (Verdun front) in the sector between Caurieres Wood and Chambrettes.

Everywhere else the night was calm.

BERLIN DENIES LOSSES.

Asserts That Allied Attacks in the Kemmel Region Failed.

BERLIN, May 12, (via London.)—The day official communication from General Headquarters says:

The fighting activity was restricted to local engagements. North of Kemmel and on the southern bank of the Lys the enemy attacked after violent artillery preparation at several points, pressing forward in strong reconnissances.

North of Kemmel in hand-to-hand fighting we broke down an enemy attack on our lines. Elsewhere his atorming troops collapsed under our fire.

On the western bank of the Avre violent fighting developed as a result of our advance southwest of Mailly, during which we captured forty prisoners.

Between the Avre and the Oise there were many reconnoitring engagements. On the remainder of the front there was nothing important.

In aerial fighting during the last two days nineteen enemy airplanes were shot down, twelve of them being brought down by the fighting Echelon formerly led by Baron von Riegbthofen.

The day bulletin from German headquarters refers to Saturday's fighting in the Kemmel region, the result of which—the capture of Hill 44—is noted in the British dispatches.

GALICIA IS NEAR REVOLT.

People Are Dying of Hunger and Austrian Premier Is Warned.

LONDON, Monday, May 13.—The food situation in Galicia is absolutely insupportable, and the population is dying of hunger, Socialist Deputies of Galicia have telegraphed to Dr. von Seidler, the Austrian Premier, an Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Zurich says. The Deputies demand the immediate importation of grain from Poland.

Popular exasperation, they add, is growing to such an extent that the Deputies decline to take responsibility in the event of grave developments.

WAR CAN BE WON ONLY BY SPECIALISTS

Development of Mechanical Devices Puts a Premium on Efficiency of Individuals.

BRAVERY NOT SUFFICIENT

Training, Discipline, and Aptitude at Tsamwork the Vital Qualities of the Modern Soldier.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. By a Staff Correspondent.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, Saturday, May 11.—THE TIMES correspondent yesterday visited a detachment of French tanks which have taken an active part in the operations which led to the retaking of Senecat Wood on April 18.

Properly speaking, the tanks are known in the French Army as artillery of assault. Like the artillery, they are divided into squadrons and batteries. At preeent they do not form a separate branch of service, and the personnel is recruited from the artillery, infantry, cavalry, and even the navy, but their crews wear a special badge in the form of crossed cannon surmounted by an artillery helmet.

The officers in charge emphasized particularly the great need for thorough advance training in co-operation between tanks and infantry. In this respect every day of the six weeks I have now spent with the French armies confirme me more strongly in a belief which is not without interest to America, namely, that from A to Z this is now a war of specialists.

The enormous advances that have been made in the development of mechanical aids to warfare have had the paradoxical effect of putting a premium on the efficiency of individuals. Only units that have been brought to the highest point of fitness as regards their own training and teamwork combination with other forces or branches of the service can hope to survive the shock of modern war.

If there has been any tendency in America to wonder why our troops required such a lengthy period of preparation, here is an anewer whose correctness has been dearly proved by the expenditure of French, British, and German blood. Artillery, infantry, aviation, it is everywhere the same story—success goes not to the bravest or even to the best equipped, but to those whose training and discipline are moet complete and whose teamwork and mutual inter-assistance is most thorough and effective.

A atory told me of the Senecat battle proved this theory to the hilt if further proof were needed. In the sector of attack where tanks and infantry were able to keep in touch, access was rapid and complete. The tanks destroyed machine-gun nests which might have held up the infantry, and the infantry prevented hostile grenadiers and special troops armed with "anti-tank" bullets of unusual penetrative force from interfering with the advance of the tanke. At other points where the French monsters outdistanced the supporting infantry, they were sooner or later put out of action or compelled to retreat.

The officers spoke enthusiastically of the keenness and quickness to learn of four young officers of the American Army, attached to their unit for instruction.

"Right at the outset they surprised us by their almost instinctive grasp of the mechanical problems involved," said the commander. "In that vitally important respect they hardly needed any teaching. But that they should so soon comprehend the system of manoeuvring and co-operation with the infantry was hardly to be expected from men who had not had long previous military training. We are delighted with their progress, and I am certain that America will, before long, give the boches a startling lesson in the use of assault artillery. In courage and élan, which are perhaps the moet needed qualities for an assault artillery commander, your boys are magnificent. They were bitterly disappointed that I was unable to permit them to take part in the Senecat affair, although they had been with us only a few days when it took place."

DEMANDS DEATH FOR DUVAL AND MARION

Prosecutor in Bonnet Rouge Case Also Objects to Calling Caillaux as Witness.

PARIS, May 12.—Captain Mornet, the prosecutor in the case of the Directors of the Bonnet Rouge, the Germanophile newspaper, who are on trial for treason, ended his summing up last night by dramatically demanding sentence of death upon Duval and Marion. His words caused a sensation. He said he would leave the other defendante to the decieion of the court.

Befors Captain Mornet began his summing up, a letter was read from Paul Painlevé, former Minister of War, protesting agsinet one of the witnesses, Lieutenant Bruysnt, being described as chief of the morale service at General Headquartere. M. Painlevé declared that while he was Minister of War no such service existed, and that he always was in constant touch with the Commander in Chief on all questions relating to morale and pacificist propagnada in the army.

At the resumption of the trial today, M. Bacri, counsel for Landau, one of the reporters who is charged with treason, demanded that the President of the court eummon M. Caillaux, former Premier, who is in jail awaiting trial on a charge of eeplonage, as a witnees.

Captain Mornet objected, eaying that M. Caillaux himself was under a charge of treason in a case that was cieeely connected with the one on trisl.

The Judge thereupon refused to call M. Caillaux, and M. Bacri said that he himself would eummon him.

CHINESE SUSPENDED BATTLE

Rev. J. A. Walsh Says They Refused to Harm a Foreigner.

Special to The New York Times.

OSSINING, N. Y., May 12.—The Rev. James A. Walsh, head of the Catholic Foreign Missionary Society, who has just returned from a six months' tour of China, said today that when he approached Yeong-Kong in Kwangtung province, where the northern forces of the Government are fighting the southern army of the revolution, a prominent resident, who was a friend of General Leong, leading the northerners, told him that the belligerents would not intentionally barm a foreigner, and, if requeeted, both sides would stop fighting so he could pass. Word was sent ahead to General Leong and both sides stopped firing. Father Walsh decided to take a circuitoue route and not pase between the opposing armies. When they discovered this the battle was renewed.

Juet before he reached Kiang Po a rebel army took the city and sacked the bank of $10,000. So the city could conduct business as usual the populace took up a collection, and, by giving the invaders $50 apiece, got them to throw down their arms and leave town. Outlaws are conducting wholesale kidnappings, Father Walsh declared, and in one instance stole one-tbird of the population of a village.

reaching ite objectives. The second stage, commencing April 3, between the Lys and the La Bassée Canal, had half this width and only a third of its depth. The resultant attack on the Flanders hills, after a long pause, yielded on April 25 a single valuable position, Mount Kemmel, and an advance of about three miles on a frontage of twelve miles. Now the enemy has been everywhere arrested. The Allies have unified their command and their forces and very little possibility of surprise seems to remain.

LONDONERS PRAISE AMERICAN SOLDIERS

Enthusiasm at Parade Called Most Notable Since Early Days of the War.

WORKMANLIKE AND STURDY

Newspapers Commend Appearance of Men—Campaign Started for Hospitality to Them.

LONDON, May 12.—The appearance of American national army men on parade in the streets of London yesterday aroused the enthusiasm of the Sunday papers as have few events in many months. The writers unite in giving unstinted praise to the appearance of the men, and predict for them a record of splendid achievement when they reach the front.

"Since the thrilling days of the first months of the war," saye The Observer, "London has not known such a notable scene of enthusiasm as that evoked yesterday. 'The finest sight I have seen since the war began,' was the verdict of a young soldier who has seen service on four fronts. The men are a fine-looking body, and appear to be in the pink of condition. The companies filed past with light, elastic step, keeping excellent time and creating a mighty favorable impression of their marching qualities and physique."

"Londoners cheered yesterday as they have not cheered for many months," says Lloyds Weekly News. "From the moment when the first battalion detrained to the last minute farewell when the crowd called out, 'Come back soon,' the day was one of heartening friendliness. It was tho women who gave the Americans a epecial welcome. 'God bless you,' they cried all along the route. Mothers lifted their children that they might have a sight of the soldiere from acroes the sea who were going to fight side by eide with daddy. And the waiting crowds found a new name for the visitors.

Great Friendship Struck Up.

"As tho first battalion swung out from Waterloo Station eome one called out to a friend that they were 'a real husky lot.' The word pleased the fancy of the crowd and soon every one was calling for cheers for 'The Huskies.' It was a great friendship which was struck up between the London crowd and the American boye who have come across to give them a hand. That was the feeling that pereieted to the last when the visitore said good-bye for the time being to London."

The Weekly Despatch prints a letter written home by an American soldier yesterday describing the day's proceedings, of which the following is an extract:

"The whole march gave one a sort of at-homo feeling. I think that was the biggest thing about it if you ask me—that they should want us to feel at home, and that we should feel at home. Some of the fellows say it was the biggest moment they ever hope to have, standing there in front of the palace. What it made me feel was that we are all in it together."

Frederick Wile in The Weekly Despatch eaye that as an American he knows that every man in the regiment felt it was the happiest and most memorable event in his life. He adds that The Despatch hae received a sheaf of letters from all over Great Britain with countless schemes for organized hospitality to the American troope.

"Whether good or bad," he says, "the suggestions spring unmistakably from one universal sentiment with a whole-hearted anxiety to convert Great Britain into Sammie's 'blighty' if he will have it."

Campaign for Hospitality.

The Weekly Despatch has started a campaign for hospitality to American soldiers.

"The King's message to every American soldier upon his landing upon our soil is a magnificent lead to the country," it saye. "The King leads. Who will not follow?"

"The war has given London many scenes—eome gay, some grave—but few have surpassed yesterday's, when 3,000 soldiers of republican America marched through the capital to parade for the sovereign ruler of the British Empire," says The Times. "Very workmanlike looked these sturdy sons of the New World, carrying their full kit; very happy they looked as they took the salute of their Ambassador; very proud they were as they marched past the great white statue of Queen Victoria and eaw the King of England raise his hand to the Star-Spangled Banner that symbolized their homeland. It was a wonderful eight, that visible union of the two great English-speaking races.

"From early morning Londoners united to pay homago to the men from across the occan. Officers and men were alike delighted at the cordiality of their reception, and spoke enthusiastieally of the Londonere who received them so handeomely.".

"They all are a fine body of men," The People says. "Tbey marched somewhat more stiffly than our own lads, but excoedingly well, and made not only a very excellent show, but a very good impression on all observers."

Reynolds's Newspaper says: "It was good to see the gleam of pleasure in the eyes of the American boys when they swung along to the accompaniment of a London roar. For many a year I shall recall the gladness of the welcomo Tommy Atkins gave these tall cousins from across the water."

Grit and Determination.

The Sunday Pictorial says: "The King could not help but notice the grit and determination of the Americans reflected in their clean shaven faces and square jaws."

Lord Denbigh, addressing the Anglo-French Society of London yesterday, said one of the most inspiring sights he had ever seen was the march of the American battalions in London. They were as fine a lot of men as he had seen for a long time. They looked to be men of that quality which would train very fast. They would becoms good soldiers very much faster than the hoche would have them, he declared.

The Bishop of London, speaking at the dedication of motor ambulances in a suburb of London, said he had been asked why his voice was so husky. He declared it was breause he had been cheering American troops in London.

The Bishop said only those who had been across the Atlantic could understand and appreciate the importance of America's entering the war. In the first place, he asserted, it marked one of the greatest epochs in the history of the world. America alwaya had been a peace-loving nation, but its people were so impressed with the vital issues of right and wrong connected with the conflict that they had thrown aside that love of peace and had plunged into the struggle without reservation.

Points Germany's Blunder.

If people wanied to know what would be the verdict of mankind as to whether this war was right or wrong, he said, they would not be able to get a more emphatic finding than was given by the United States on entering the etruggle. That country, he declared, was the greateet and richest in the world and bitterly would Germany rue the day when by her ruthless warfare of eea murder she brought against herself the reeources of that wonderful country.

"If this country once sent forth a little band of pilgrims to America," said Charles McCurdy, Member of Parliament, at a dinner last night, "the United States is sending back to the mother country men who come to our shores on a pilgrimage as holy as—yes, more holy than—any crusade that ever started to reconquer the Holy Land in the Middle Ages. As I saw the historic march of the American troops in London today, they seemed to me one and all men who are conscious of the high and lofty mission upon which they have come."

The American Consul General, Robert P. Skinner, said:

"We are in this war to the finish, and shall place at your disposal all the resources of which we dispoee until, with you and the other allies, we have achieved a definite and conclusive victory."

CAME FROM CAMP GORDON.

Privates That Marched in London Were Mostly from East.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 12.—Private cables received in Atlanta indicate that the national army regiment which paraded through London on Saturday was the 325th from Camp Gordon. The regiment is commanded by Colonel Whitman, who was put in charge when the 82d Division was formed at Camp Gordon last Fall. Tho company officers of the regiment are mostly Georgiane who won their commissions in the first training camps for officers.

But the majority of the privates are from New York and the Eastern States. When Camp Gordon was firet opened drafted men from Georgia, Florida, and Tennessee were sent there, but nearly all of these men were soon sent to National Guard camps to fill up units from their respective States, and their places were taken by thousands of drafted men from Camp Upton, Camp Dix, and Camp Merritt, and these are the men who marched through London. The South is etrongly repreeented among the officers, but nearly all the privates are from New York and adjacent States.

WARNS OF GERMANY'S LICHNOWSKY TACTICS

May Be Using Disclosures in Scheme for Status Quo Peace in West, London Paper Says.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Monday, May 13.—The Daily Chronicle eays editorially thie morning:

"It may be asked why Lichnoweky's memorandum, a document so fatal to the past anti-British propaganda of the German Government, ahould be allowed now by the Berlin censorship to circulate freely in Germany and reach an enormous sale in cheap editions, or why von Jagow, the former German Foreign Secretary, who was put up to state the official case about it in the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, should, Balaam-like, have rather corroborated than refuted its tendency.

"The reason, we fancy, is not far to seek. Germany by her treaties with Russia, the Ukraine, Finland, and Rumania, as well as by her virtual conquest during the war of her allies, Austria-Hungary and Turkey, has obtained in Eastern and Central Europe all and more than all that she made war for. If only she could make peace with the Western powers on terms which left her these vast acquisitions, her future position of despotic world supremacy would be assured. If she could get such a peace on the terms of the status quo or anything like it in the west it would pay her handsomely, but an obstacle to such a peace is the intense anti-British feeling which her propaganda has bred among her own people.

"Unless her Government can dampen the illusion, which they themselves have created, that Britain is their principal enemy, they may be prevented by German opinion from making an Anglo-German peace at a time when, and on terms on which, it would be most to Germany's and least to Britain's interest that it should be made.

"This is, we think, the true diagnosis of the great many novel symptoms of 'friendliness' which have appeared toward us in Germany since all the fruits of the Central and Eastern European orchards tumbled into Germany's lap, and if it is correct we muat be very wary about such symptoms."

Philip Gibbs's Story of the Great Battle

the German depote, the gathering of munition stores, the regrouping of guns, the establishment of field hospitals for the wreckage that will follow the next storm, and the arrangement of every detail that must be ordered for a battle of the scale that is now being measured.

Movements Masked by Night.

The British airmen out on reconnoissance see sometimes unusual activity on the German railways, a continual tide of rolling etock along some of their linea, and occasionally a long column of marching men, but it is at night that most of the movement takes place, and in the darkness one may assume that these fresh divisions with their field batteries and their heavies are taking up positions nearer the allied lines in readiness for the hour of assault, whenever that may be.

So now the allied armies are waiting expectantly with that tension which all men feel before a coming battle. They believe, as far as I know their thoughts from talks with officers here and there, that this time the enemy will he held and shattered, and that he has nothing like the chance that was his on March 21, when he had greater numbers, the first fever of enthusiasm, and a wider line of attack, which was held thinly in proportion to the strength he brought against it. If he fails this time, they believe, and I believe, that the great hopes of Germany will he utterly destroyed.

Since the beginning of these great battles in bleak, cold weather Spring has come and almost Summer, changing all the aspect of the old battlefields and of the woods behind crateriand and of the cities under fire.

I went into one of those cities the other day, Arras, which to me and to many of us out here is a queerly enchanted place because of its beauty, which survives even three years of bombardment, and because of the many great memories which it holds in its old houses and streets and the aense of romance which lurke in its courtyards and squares, reaching back to ancient history before its death. For Arras is dead and but the beautiful corpse of the city that wes once very fair and noble.

During the recent weeks the enomy has flung many big explosive shells into it, so that its ruins have become more ruined and many houses hardly touched before have now been destroyed. It wae sad to aee this change, the fresh mangling of stones that had already been scarred, the heaps of masonry that lay plied about these streets that were utterly deserted. I walked down many of them and saw no living aoul, only a few lean cats which prowled about, slinking close to the walls and crouching when a German shell came over with a rending noise.

Cathedral in Ruins.

Bright sunlight shone down these streets, putting a lazy glamour upon their broken frontages and flinging back shadows from high walls, except where shell holes let in the light. The cathedral and the great Palace of the Bishops were unroofed, with tall pillars broken off below the vaulting and an avalanche of white masonry about them. They were clear-cut and dazzling under the blue sky, and one was hushed by the tragic grandeur of these ruins.

One of the British airplanes flew low over the city, and its engine sang loudly with a vibrant humming, and now and again the crash of a gun or a shell loosened aome stones or plaeter below its wings. Other birde were singing. Spring birds, who are not out for war but sweetheart ing in the gardens of Arrae.

There are gardens in Arras etill, behind shattered house fronts and in little courtyards with broken pillars, and they are all green and luxuriant, growing untrimmed with flowers all gold in the grass. Young trees have grown sturdily amid the sinister streets, and it is on them that the hirde of Arras are singing, in spite of the shellfire, in this great loneliness and tragic desolation.

ITALIANS STORM POST ON NORTHERN FRONT

Wipe Out a Col dell' Orso Garrison—Monte Corno Victory Was Important.

ROME, May 12.—Italian troops yesterday stormed an Austrian post at Col dell' Orso, on the northern mountain fort hetween the Brenta and the Piave, destroying ite garrison. Sharp local fighting occurred at other points, according to the War Office statement, which follows:

There were patrol actions along the mountain front. One of our reconnoitring parties stormed an advanced post at Col dell' Orso, destroying its garrison in the course of hand-to-hand fighting with bayonets and bombe, and capturing a machine gun. Other patrols put enemy detachments to flight with loeses. War materials were captured in the Asolone area. Enemy parties were repulsed north of Monte Mantello, in the Lagarina Valley, and to the right of the Brenta Valley.

There were desultory artillery duels in the Arsa and Brenta Valleys and along the Piave River.

Seven hostile airplanes were brought down.

ITALIAN ARMY HEADQUARTERS, May 11, (Associated Press.)—After a long period of inactivity, owing to weather conditions, Italian troope on the mountain front executed a brilliant operation last night, capturing the dominating position of Monte Corno, destroying an elaborate syetem of enemy defenses and taking 100 prisoners, two guns, a number of machine guns, and much war material.

The action was in the Arsa Valley, which leade down from the Lagarina Valley, and is the main line of approach from Trent and Roveretc. It was here that the Austrians attempted to reach the Venetian Plain in the first great offensive. Recently they have erected powerful defenses, with battery positions built in rock and electrically charged, and with a eyetem of barbed-wire entanglemente.

There was considerable snow remaining on Monte Corno, which is 6,000 feet high. This increased the difficulties of movement of the comparatively small Italian force which carried on the attack. It was preceded by a short artillery action. The infantry advanced over rocky and precipitous heights. The enemy was taken by surprise and could make little effective resistance. The movemsnt was carried out by daylight. All the enemy's defensive works were occupied. An Italian position was eatablished on the crest of the mountain and the surrounding slopes.

The chief effect of the action is to dislodge the Austrians from the dominating height in the centre of the main highway from the mountains and to give the Italians the advantage of that position, with the command it has over the heights and approaches. The result gives great satiefaction, especially as the victory was won on the very spot where Dr. Cesare Battisti, a Deputy from Trent, who went over to the Italians, and others of his heroic band, were captured during the first offensive. Dr. Battisti was put to death by the Austrians on the charge of treason.

Vienna Reports Corno Retaken.

VIENNA, May 12, (via London.)—The Austrian official statement issued today says:

In the Pasubio region Friday the enemy attacked our protecting troops, as a result of which he succeeded in penetrating our advanced positions on Monte Corno. The Italians were again thrown out by our counter-attack which began yesterday.

On other sectors of the mountain front Italian reconnoitring detachments were repulsed.

MINE SINKS SWEDISH SHIP.

Eight Killed in Wreck of Large Trawler North of Gothenburg.

LONDON, May 12.—A dispatch to The Exchange Telegraph from Copenhagen says that the German mine field north of Gothenburg has brought disaster to the large Swedish trawler Agnes, which struck a mine between Vingsa and Scalv.

The trawler sank immediately. Eight Swedes on board were killed. Only two of the ship's company were saved.

15 Missing from Torpedoed Sloop.

LONDON, May 12.—The Admiralty announces that a British mine-sweeping sloop was torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine on May 6. Two officers and thirteen men are missing and are presumed to have been drowned.

AMERICAN ARMY HELD UNTIL FILLED

coming battle may be a repetition of Verdun on a large scale, and, if both sides should be exhausted, the Allies have vast powers of recuperation, while Germany has drafted her resources already."

Baker Away, Washington Puzzled.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—News of the British statement that the Entente was so confident of its ability to hold the Germans that the American Army was not to be used until it became a complete and self-supporting force was received by army officers here tonight with frank delight, not only becauee of the eupreme confidence indicated by such a decision, but on account of the keen desire of American military men to take the field against the enemy as a distinctly American force.

It was evident, however, that officials of the War Department were puzzled by the Ottawa dispatch quoting the British war summary. In the absence of Secretary Baker, who is in the South on an inspection tour, no one would talk officially, but the impression was given that no information had reached the department to indicate an intention to change the announced policy of brigading Americans with the British and French armies so as to hasten their arrival at the front to aid in etemming the German assault.

It is no aecret that President Wilson and his military advisers conceated to this arrangement only to meet a great emergency and to aid in weiding the allied armies on the western front into one effective force. To do it they had to ask the army for a sacrifice which, under other circumetancee, would not have been considered.

Under the plan of filling up the British and French gaps with American reeerves, the Americane would be equipped and supplied hy the armies to which they were attached. If that plan le changed, the Americane, now going overseas as faet as ehipe can be provided to carry them, will marcb to the front ae soon ss their training behind tho lines is completed, as an American army, and a new and powerful force to play a part in driving the Germans back into tbeir own country.

BEARSS WINS WAR CROSS.

American Lieutenant Colonel Decorated by the French.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., May 12.—Lieut. Col. Hiram C. L. Bearss, with the American army in France, today cabled his wife at her home in this city that he had received the French War Cross.

In a letter from him received by Mrs. Bearss on Friday afternoon, her husband said that he had been a "lucky devil so far, with shells striking just in front of me, just in back of me, and in placee which I had just left."

Lieut. Col Bearss sailed for France on Aug. 5 with a marine corps contingent and soon wae transferred to an army regiment. He hae seen service in the Philippines, in Santo Domingo, and at Vera Cruz. For his work in Santo Domingo he was commended five times, and he aleo received a commendation when in the Philippines. He was in Santo Domingo when ordered to return to this country prior to sailing for France.

"The morale of the troops is the best I have ever seen," he wrote from France.

AMERICAN ARMY CLEANEST.

Percentage of Blood Diseases Far Below Expectations.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. From a Staff Correspondent.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 12. — Major Hugh H. Young, director of the work of dealing with communicable blood diseases in the army, told me today that the success of his department exceeded any estimates made.

In making plans for this department of medical work in France it had been calculated by the medical authorities in Washington to have ten 1,000-bed hospitals, in which a million men could receive treatment, but with 500,000 Americans in France there is not one of the five allotted Americans in any of the hospitals now running, and only 500 cases of this type of disease needing hospital treatment, instead of the expected 5,000.

In other words, instead of having 1 per cent. of our soldiers in hospitals from social diseases, as had been expected, the actual number is only one-tenth of 1 per cent. There is no reason to doubt that this record will be maintained all along. The hospitals prepared for this special treatment are to be used for other cases.

This means that the American Army is the cleanest army in the world. The results, according to Major Young, have been achieved by preventive steps taken by the American medical directors, coupled with the co-operation of the men.

REVIVALIST IS ARRESTED.

Whitney is Held on the Charge of Calling Our Soldiers Murderers.

Special to The New York Times.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 12.—On chargee that he had said that American soldiers were murderers and that Germany was not to blame for the war, the Rev. Charles A. Whitney of Ithaca was arrested here yesterday and held in $3,000 bail.

Affidavits were made by Levi P. Miles, Charles W. and John Hathaway that in the course of a revival service held in Deposit on April 15 Whitney made these seditious remarks, and the warrant was issued under the Espionage act.

The War Situation

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

Another day bas passed without the great German attack which has been expected developing, a day which, like so many of the last two weeks, has been filled with small local attacks, first by one side, and then by the other. The French have been particularly active in this way, the scene of their activity stretching from the woods of Mareuil, near Hainvilliers, to Aubvilliers, north of Grivesnes.

The first operation of the French in this sector was just to the north of Grivesnes, wbere there is a large, square park just beyond the town cemetery. The western edge of this park is on the lip of a hill which slopes down steeply into a saddle before the ground rises again further west. Like so much of the country in this particular neighborhood the terrain is characterized by large plateaux, which average some 350 feet high—200 feet above the level of the floor of the Avre Valley. Connecting all of these plateaux are saddles of ground of varying height.

It is along this series of small tablelands that the allied line runs, the high ground giving them a distinct advantage in halting the great advance. Although the park of Grivesnes was originally heavily wooded, the trees have in all probability been entirely destroyed by artillery fire. The French attack was designed, then, merely to push forward further along the plain of the plateau and give the lines generally an added security.

After fighting here had lapsed through the achievement of the local objective for which it was started, the French shifted their attention to the southern side of the Amiens salient, and attacked on a narrow front against the woods near Hainvillers. Here also some slight advance was made in the woods of Mareuil. But the operatin was a very minor one, and was distinctly local in its effect.

Somewhat north of Grivesnes, in the vicinity of Mailly-Rainsval, the Germans have been busy trying their hands at the small attacks for local objectivee. The artillery fire has been very heavy, it is officially reported, although no serious infantry fighting has occurred. Except for these minor actions there have been no elements of intersst in this section of the battlefront for many days, other than tbe usual heavy artillery firing.

The question of numbers has again come to the foreground by a statement that authentic reports show Germany has in the field against the Allies about five million men. There is no discrepancy between these figures and those which have been previously estimated. At least this is by no means a necessary discrepancy. There are a great many more men in the German Army than will ever be seen in actual combat. There are many who are enlisted, but who are engaged in military work other than that of actually fighting. Among the fighting troops, the engineer regiments are not numbered. They may fight at times, as the engineer forces of the Allies have done, when the situation becomes so desperate that every man who can handle a rifle is needed. But they are not considered as fighting troops. They are combatant troope, but not fighting troops.

The same is true of other units whicb are necessary for the performance of highly epecialized servlee. A successful attack or defense, for example, demands a steady flow of ammunition and supplies. This at once puts a demand on transport service, which in turn demands good roads, both rail and dirt. These have to be maintained and built, and the work is practically all done by soldiers, supplemented where possible with labor of various kinds. But in France and England there is very little, if any, labor available, all of the ablebodied men having been drawn into the army. Therefore there is no other recourse tban to uee the soldier for this purpose. And so we might go through the Ordnance Department, the Quartermaster's Department, the Commissary, and others who in the ordinary run of things are occupied in tasks other than that of fighting.

While exact figures are naturally impossible to obtain, it is, nevertheless, highly improbable that Germany can maintain all of these nonfighting industries with less than 2,000,000 men, leaving 3,000,000 actually in divisions and capable of being used in action. In a sense, there is no present shortage of men in Germany, That is, they can strike again with the samo or equal force which tbey used in the battle which began on March 21, although there will be the difference that they will not be able to continue to reinforce the divisions engaged, or to fill them up as rapidly, as they did in the first attack. They certainly have enough to launch another offensive and to maintain it for some time. And we may be sure that this will be done.

It is doubtful, however, whether they will he ahle to mass any greater strength than they did before. The first attack was designed to reach a decision before the forward movement was halted. This we have been assured of by the German press itself. It is but fair to presume then that for this effort Germany had maseed her maximum available strength; that she had aseembled all posslble resources in order to make victory more sure. She can do no moro than this when she attacks again. But she can do aa much; in men and guns she can mueter a striking force equal to that used in her first effort. And until this force strikes and we see the result, the final outcome of the battle must remain in doubt.

CHAPUT'S HEROISM FATAL

Young Patrol Leader Stays Up After Bullet Cuts Artery—Fine Spirit of Rivalry.

From a Staff Correspondent.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WITH THE FRENCH ARMIES, May 12.—"If German aviators had given accurate reports of our effectives in the front line during certain moments of the March offensive it is impossible to say what might have happened," declared the Chief of Staff of one of the French Generals who played a principal part in repelling the enemy onrush to a NEW YORK TIMES correspondent a few weeks ago.

In reply to a question why the enemy airmen failed to impart this vital information, he answered:

"Because those few of them who crossed our lines never returned to tell the tale. I attribute the Germans' failure to carry out their ambitious plans in no small measure to the damage inflicted on their air force by our pilots in the six weeks that preceded the offensive."

The same conditions are repeated today. Once more Germans are gathering forces for a mighty stroke, and once more allied airmen are taking terrible toll of boche fliers. THE TIMES correspondent yesterday revisited the airdrome of the crack Stork group. The first words with which the officer in command greeted me were:

"The Americans have got another boche this afternoon."

Americans Down Foe.

Parsons and Baylies had shot down a German biplane near Montdidier an hour earlier. I met the victorious pilots in the group clubroom a few minutes later. After a morning impossible for flying owing to low clouds, they had left the airdrome with a French comrade at the first possible moment after luncheon, as Fonck had bet them he would get a boche before them, and also would get more than they during the day.

Owing to the haze Parsons lost touch with Baylies, and, sighting eight enemy planes very high over the lines—about 12,000 feet—climbed up alone to attack them. Finding that the enemy maintained superior altitude he dived and perceived a hostile biplane to the right. As he swung toward it he saw another Stork machine dart forward to attack. Though he did not know it, that was Baylies.

After a brief exchange of shots the boche appeared to sideslip headlong for a few seconds, then recovered himself on to an even keel. Parsons seized the opportunity, and plunged straight at the enemy, whose movements again became erratic and who seemed seriously injured. The American gave him a volley at close range. That ended the battle. The two Americans had the satisfaction of seeing the German plane crash to earth a short distance behind the German lines.

"I knew we had got him when he went down 'steetmind,'" said Baylies, whose seventh official victory this is.

Hardly were the words out of his mouth when the roar of an airplane engine close overhead drowned the conversation. The sound was the curiously intermittent drum, drum—drum, drum, drum. To pilots in the tent it was an unmistakable signal.

Motors Signal Victories.

"That means another boche," said Parsons. "Whenever one of our men has downed an enemy he flies around the field before landing, cutting off the gas in shot fashion. Perhaps it is Fonck. Anyway, we've beaten him to it and won our bet."

It was Fonck, sure enough, but the bet was drawn, for the Ace of Aces had shot down three enemy planes in one short hour, from 3 o'clock to 4. While the two Americans were summoned to the other end of the field to pose for cinema photographs, "to be sent to America," as the commander told us, Fonck recounted the story of his achievement.

"There were three of them together—all biplanes—at about 6,000 feet, between Moreuil and Mailly-Raineval," he said. "I was leading my patrol, and went straight for the nearest two. It was too easy for words. The first one crashed after five shots. The other turned to run, but it was too late. I let fly one volley into the exposed rear of the plane, and he, too, went down, head over heels."

"And that ought to have been enough for you," put in one of his patrol.

"You might have given us a chance at the third," added one of his comrades, laughing.

"You should have kept in closer touch," Fonck replied, and continued to me:

"They were some way behind me, and I was afraid the boche would get away, so I sailed right at him and brought him down two or three miles further east."

"That's true," added a comrade. "Fonck goes at them like a flash of lightning, so quickly no one else can keep up with him. And you ought to have seen how he swung round on the second German. The plane spun over perpendicularly, he turned so fast, and the enemy mast have been killed before he knew what hit him.

Baylies and Parsons re-entered at that moment, and, after congratulating Fonck, declared they were not yet beaten, as they were going out again about 5:30 o'clock.

"So am I," said Fonck. "One can't miss a chance like this, after so much bad weather."

"You haven't got a chance of beating him," put in the group commander. "Fonck's going out to get three more boches this evening, just to make a record."

I little thought the words were prophetic. At the moment of cabling I have just received official notification that the Ace of Aces actually did bring down three more Germans on his second flight—a performance never before equaled in the history of French aviation.

THE TIMES correspondent was greatly impressed by the splendid spirit of camaraderie and friendly rivalry that prevailed among the different escadrilles of the Stork group. All these youngsters are keen as mustard, but congratulate the success of one of the other equadrons as warmly as if it were their own.

Attend Strictly to Business.

Thanks largely to the exploits of one or two half-crazy individuals and rattle-brained stories and drawings in Vie Parisienne and similar Right publications, the impression prevails in Paris that airmen are all harum-scarum Lotharios. Half an hour at any big front airdrome would soon change that opinion. They smoke little, drink less, and all are solely concerned with the business in hand—downing the largest number of German airplanes in the shortest possible time.

The attitude of their commanding officers is particularly attractive. It might be defined as half-way between that of a trainer of a college football team and that of an elder brother. Discipline never suffers, but superior and subalterns talk togsther as friends, discussing past combats and planning new teamwork tactics for the future. I had further proof of this yesterday morning when I visited another battle-plane group, hardly less famous than the Storks, of which poor Chaput, one of the best, was patrol leader. The Major in charge, who is the most distinguished air commander in the French Army, had tears in his eyes as he told the story of the young ace's last fight.

"Chaput went out with a patrol of four others on Monday evening. Near Montdidier they met six Germans and attacked immediately, although the enemy had a big altitude advantage. The boys climbed up without trouble, and the battle was raging when six more Germans plunged down upon them from an even greater height.

"Chaput had already downed one boche in flames. He refused to abandon the struggle, which soon became more equal on the arrival of six other French fliers from another group. Chaput accounted for another German before being wounded, and might now he living had he not been patrol leader. Everything leads me to suppose that three bullets which pierced his left thigh and cut an artery might not have been fatal had he planed down immediately to the French lines, only two minutes away and got prompt medical aid. But it is traditional that the patrol leader guides the combat to the end.

Wrist Smashed in Fight.

"Another of our leaders, Captain de la Frecolière, found his mitrailleuse had jammed in the midst of a similar big scale battle. The fighting was so hot that one of our pilots actually rammed a boche and both crashed together. Frecolière, unable to defend himself, had his wrist smashed by a bullet, but still continued to direct the fight until the surviving enemies fled.

"That was on April 21. In Monday's fight Chaput followed his example. He was seen circling round without firing, as if hurt, then suddenly, realizing his strength was failing, he swooped down in a long volplane toward the French lines. He had just enough force to make a successful landing, but it was too late. As brancardiers, who had run up immediately, lifted him from his seat he fainted from loss of blood, with which the cockpit of his avion was flooded. He died as they were carrying him to a nearby dressing station, where his life might have been saved had he not refused to quit the post of duty.

"It is a very great loss to French aviation and even a greater to all of us who knew him."

THE TIMES correspondent had talked for over an hour with Lieutenant Chaput on a previous visit to the same aerodrome, and had been struck by his simple unaffected manner and boyish enthusiasm.

Chaput's Last Prediction.

"We will show these Storks a thing or two," were almost his last words to me. "They will soon find out that the Seagull Escadrille is chasing them hard for first place. We had not got a proper emblem before, but I have just had this made to be stenciled on all our planes," and he pointed to a brass plate bearing a seagull twice lifesize, with outstretched wings.

"Take it from me," he added, "before a month has elapsed the boches will run from the Seagulls the way they do from the Storks."

Chaput has not lived to see his prediction accomplished, but he died fighting as he would have wished.

"God keep you from dying old," were the concluding words of Adjutant Baron in a letter to his comrades written on the eve of his departure for the October (1918) attack on the Mauser works, in which he met his death.

What fitter requiem could be found for the young heroes of war aviation?

SUBMARINES GAIN, CAPELLE ASSERTS

"Assured Prospect of Final Success," Minister of Navy Tells the Reichstag.

BELITTLES BUILDING HERE

U-Boat Construction Still Exceeds Losses, He Says—Reichstag Support Counted On.

AMSTERDAM, May 11.—In a debate in the Reichstag today on the second reading of the naval estimates, as reported in a Berlin dispatch, Herr Pfleger, Centrist, said on behalf of the Main Committee that even though there were differences of opinion regarding the political significance of the submarine war, the entire Reichstag was at one as concerned its military achievements. All held the view that the U-boat campaign should not be given up or restricted in any way, and that the construction of submarines should be promoted as far as possible. That was the opinion, also, he said, of the highest Government officials and the army and navy commanders.

Vice Admiral von Capelle, Minister of Navy, stated that unrestricted U-boat warfare meant a very strong naval offensive against the Entente.

"The reports for April are favorable," he continued. "Naturally losses occur, but the main thing is that the increase in submarines exceeds the losses. Our naval offensive is stronger today than at the beginning of unrestricted submarine warfare. That gives us an assured prospect of final success.

"The submarine war is developing more and more into a struggle between U-boat action and new construction of ships. Thus far the monthly figures of destruction have continued to be several times as large as those of new construction. Even the British Ministry and the entire British press admit that.

"The latest appeal to British shipyard workers appears to be especially significant. For the present the appeal does not appear to have had great success. According to the latest statements British shipbuilding fell from 192,000 tons in March to 112,000 in April; or, reckoned in ships, from 32 to 22. That means a decline of 80,000 tons, or about 40 per cent.

"America thus far has built little, and has fallen far below expectations. Even if an increase is to be reckoned with in the future, it will be used up completely by America herself.

"In addition to the sinkings by U-boats, there is a large decline in cargo space owing to marine losses and to ships becoming unserviceable. One of the best-known big British ship owners declared at a meeting of shipping men that the losses of the British merchant fleet through marine accidents, owing to conditions created by the war, were three times as large as in peace."

Admiral von Capelle's reference to British ship construction is superficially correct, but omits to state that the April record, as reported, 111,433 tons, was achieved despite a large increase in the repairing of merchantmen, to which attention was called in a British Admiralty statement issued on May 9. The same statement showed that the shipping completed in allied and neutral countries in the quarter ended April 30 was 544,327 tons.

In the same general connection it should be noted that the tonnage of ships launched in the United States in April was 240,000, as against 196,700 in March, while the record for the week ended May 4 was 89,000 tons.

CALLS IRISH PROBLEM GRAVEST OF ALL

British Labor Chief Expresses Sympathy for Home Rule, but Tells Difficulties.

LONDON, May 12.—George Nicoll Barnes, Labor member of the War Cabinet, who presided today at a meeting in Kensington Theatre to welcome two members of the American Labor Mission, said that the letter of General Frederick B. Maurice to the press, charging the Government with concealing the real facts of the military situation, was an incident which would soon be forgotten. There was a far graver question in the situation in Ireland.

"It might seem that while we are fighting for small nationalities and leaving Ireland alone we are rather inconsistent," Mr. Barnes continued. "Things, however, are not so simple as they look when seen from a distance. Ireland has two unite, and they are as widely separated in ideals and the outlook of ordinary life as it is possible for two peoples to be, and the difficult problem is to harmonize public feeling in Ireland and at the same time uphold unity in the United Kingdom.

"Labor is in complete sympathy with Irish national sentiment," the speaker asserted, "but the problem is the most difficult one that could face any Government. The difficulties, however, must be solved. Ireland must have its Parliament; so must Scotland, and so must Wales. At the present time Ireland is doing little to take part in a war which concerns her as much as any other part of the empire. Moreover, Ireland is absorbing many thousands of our soldiers, who would much better be employed in fighting the Germans. It is up to us to find a way out of the difficulty, and we must try to bring the two parties together."

BRITISH CASUALTIES IN OSTEND RAID 47

LONDON, May 12.—A Dover dispatch says that the British casualties in the raid on Ostend were two officers and six men killed and two officers and eight men missing, supposed to have been killed. Of these two officers and eight men were on the Vindictive.

Five officers and twenty-four men were wounded, of whom one officer and sixteen men were on the Vindictive.

AMSTERDAM, May 12.—A German version of the sinking of the Vindictive in Ostend Harbor as recounted by an "eyewitness" has been received here.

"When the bombardment from the sea began," says the account, "ten airplanes appeared over the town dropping bombs and flaming objects. The Vindictive struck the piles at the extreme end of the jetty and sank. There she may stay as long as she likes, for she does not interfere with us.

TO AID SOLDIERS' FAMILIES.

Hebrew Nursery Plans to Help Relatives of Men in Palestine.

A plan to aid the families of men serving in the Jewish battalions in Palestine, and in other work of the Zionist movement there, was announced last night at the Hebrew Garden and Day Nursery, at 35 Montgomery Street, by Bernard K. Marcus, an officer of the organization. Mothers who wish to work may leave their children at the nursery, and other means of aiding the families will be considered.

It is expected that about 600 children will be cared for in the nursery under the plan. Volunteers from the Loyal League and other auxiliaries of the nursery have promised to aid in the work and to give financial assistance. Judge Otto Rosalsky, Municipal Court Justice Aaron J. Levy, Joseph Barondess, and other speakers spoke in support of the plan.

DESTROYERS NAMED FOR RECENT HEROES

One Bears the Name of an Enlisted Man, Ingram, and Another That of Lieut. Kalk.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Secretary Daniels today announced the names selected for four of the torpedo boat destroyers now under construction. Two of them are named in honor of men who lost their lives as a result of acts of heroism since the United States entered the war—Lieutenant Stanton Frederick Kalk, officer in charge of the deck of the Jacob Jones when that vessel was sunk by a German submarine, and Osmond Kelley Ingram, gunner's mate, first class, who was killed when the destroyer Cassin was torpedoed in European waters on Oct. 16, 1917.

After the Jacob Jones was torpedoed Kalk swam from raft to raft, trying to equalize the load, so that the men who survived could keep afloat until they could be rescued. Weakened by exposure and exertion, he died Dec. 6, 1917, as a result of his efforts to save the lives of others. Kalk was a native of Alabama, where he was born Oct. 14, 1894. He was a resident of Washington, D. C., where his mother, Mrs. Flora S. Kalk, resides.

Ingram saw the torpedo heading toward the stern of the destroyer Cassin, where his gun was, and, realizing that if the torpedo struck in that region, where high explosives were placed, the ship would be blown up and destroyed, he ran aft instead of saving himself and threw the charges overboard. He was killed as the torpedo struck. He sacrificed his life to save his ship. He was blown overboard and his body was not recovered. The Cassin got safely into port. Ingram was the only man killed, although five others were wounded. Ingram was born in Prstt City, Ala., Aug. 3, 1887, and was serving his second term of enlistment in the navy.

The third of the new ships is named the Ward in honor of Commander James Harmon Ward, the first officer of the navy killed in action in this civil war. The Yarnall, the fourth boat, is named in honor of Lieutenant John Joliffe Yarnall, U. S. N. He was First Lieutenant of the Lawrence in the engagement on Lake Erie, Sept. 10, 1813, and was wounded several times, but refused to leave the deck.

Secretary Daniels has commended Elmer Dinnes Arnold, a seaman of the navy belonging to the armed guard detail at the New York Navy Yard, for the efficiency of the gun crew under his command on board the steamship Chincha when that vessel was attacked by a German submarine. This was the second time the Chincha had been attacked by a German submarine. After Arnold's gun crew had fired eight shots the submarins submerged. Arnold enlisted at Indianapolis on Sept. 8, 1915, and has a sister living at Carmel, Ind.

INELIGIBLE DOCTORS TO BE ORGANIZED

Will Compose Volunteer Corps, to be Called Upon for Service When Needed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 21.—The General Medicel Boerd of the Council of National Defense today started a campaign to organize all physicians ineligible for camp or field duty into the Volunteer Medicel Service Corps, so that the nation may be in a position to meet the demands of the war. A letter was sent to several thousand doctors which read in part:

"The Counell of National Defenso has authorized directed the Medical Section of the Council to organize the physicians of the country who are ineligible for membsrship in the Medical Reserve Corps on account of physical disability, over age, (55,) or civic or institutionel needs, into the Volunteer Medical Service Corps. The members of this corps will be classified according to their ability to serve and will render aid to existing governmental agencies upon request of the Army, Navy, Public Health Service, American Red Cross, or the Council of National Defense.

"It is hoped that every physician who, for any one of the reasons enumerated above, is unable to enroll in the Medicel Reserve Corps will join the Volunteer Medicel Service Corps. Since you have already indicated your desire to serve the Government by applying for a commission in the Medicel Reserve Corps, you are among the first to be sent an applieation blank, which, it is hoped, you will fill out and return immediately to this office."

The fact is emphasized that rejected applicants for service in the Medical Reserve Corps mey overcome the physicel defects that led to rejection, and may, therefore, become eligible, or that the essential public or institutional needs may become less important as the extreme needs of the army and navy become apparent. Each physician is asked, therefore, to pledge himself to apply for a commission in the Medicel Reserve Corps if at any time he becomes eligible.

The general management of the Volunteer Medicel Service Corps is vested in a Central Governing Board, which is a committee of the General Medicel Board of the Council of National Defense, and the State governing boards consists of the State Committees, Medical Section, Council of National Defense.

The procedure for joining is simple. The applicant returns his filled blank to the Central Governing Board in Washington, and it is then referred in the proper State Executive Committee for its recommendations as to the qualifications of the applicant, and as to the kind of work for which he seems most fitted.

GIVES UP CAMPUS TO WAR.

New York University to Conduct Summer Courses Downtown.

On account of the demand of the Department of War for the use of the campus and buildings of New York University at University Heights, the Department of Music, one of the largest departments of the Summer school, which is conducted at the heights, will give its courses at the Finish School, 61 East Seventy-seventh Street. Other courses in the Summer school will be given at Washington Square, at Washington Irving High School, and a few courees in chemistry and engineering, open to men only, will still be conducted at the heights. It will be impossible to have women students attend courses at the heights.

All courses in the physieal training department, under Dr. C. Ward Crampton, will be given at Washington Irving High School. The domestic arts and home economics classes will also be held at Washington Irving High School, as well as some of the laboratory courses in commercial subjects. The bulk of the Summer school will, however, be centralized in the Washington Square Building.

Although some of the courses have been cut owing to war and the consequent lack of room, the Summer school will still go forward with nearly 200 courses, all open to women, with the exception of fourteen held at University Heights. There will be seventy-two courses in pedagogical subjects, sixty-four courses in collegiate subjects, twelve in graduate subjects, and twenty-nine in commercial subjects, all accepted for credit toward degrees.

The courses in practical politics for women and in the organization of civic bodies have proved so timely and so popular that they will be continued through the Summer school in the Government courses under direction of Professor Milton E. Loomis.

The Summer school will open on Monday, July 1, and continue for six weeks.

ALLIES SUPERIOR IN GUN TECHNIQUE

Science of Counter Battery Work Popularly Explained by British Officer.

HOW TARGETS ARE FOUND

Nothing Left to Chance in Destruction or Neutralization of Enemy Artillery Group.

LONDON, May 10.—Major C. J. C. Street, R. G. A., author of "With the Guns," has written for the British Press Bureau the following article on "Counter Battery Work":

It is frequently reported in the British communiqués, especially during periods when no infantry operations are in progress, that the artillery was active on a certain sector of the front. Sometimes the phrase "artillery duel" is employed, which is rather more illuminating, but it is often difficult, even for those who actually witness such activity, to realize its object or its results.

This war has proved, to a greater extent than ever before, the value of artillery support to infantry, whether in attack or defense. It is safe to say that no attack can hope to succeed without the assistance of an artillery barrage, and, conversely, that no position can be held if the hostile artillery is allowed complete freedom to bombard it. It is, consequently, the object of both the attack and the defense to harass and if possible destroy the batteries opposed to it at all times, especially during periods when conditions render infantry operations impossible. The fewer the available guns opposed to any army, the greater the chances of that army's success when the battle comes to be joined.

So we have the modern counterpart of the "artillery duel." Both sides are constantly on the watch for the batteries opposed to them, and as soon as they are discovered steps are taken to deal with them. They can either be systematically destroyed, or they can be neutralized. The first process explains itself; the battery is bombarded with a largo number of heavy shells until its actual material is rendered useless. But a gun is a very small target at a range of five or six miles, and nothing short of a direct hit upon it is likely to put it permanently out of action. It is usually well concealed and protected in an emplacement, and, owing to its relatively small size, it is practically impossible for an observer, whether on the ground or in the air, to see whether a shell has actually hit it or not.

Expenditure of Ammunition

Consequently, a very great expenditure of ammunition is required completely to destroy a battery, and even if several hundred rounds are employed, it is unlikely that all the guns will be put out of action. During the bombardment the detachments can be withdrawn from the guns, and as the bombardment must necessarily be deliberate, in order to secure accurate obeervation, tho men have usually plenty of time to get out of the way.

But once the position of a hostile battery is accurately fixed upon the map, it is not necessary to destroy it in order to put it out of action, at least temporarily. At any moment it can be neutralized—that is to eay, that a few rounds of high explosive, shrapnel or gas shell, as may be most convenient, may be fired into the vicinity of the guns. By this means it can be made impossible for the detachments to work the guns without incurring serious loss, or, if they continue to serve the guns, their rate of fire will bo very considerably reduced, and the battery will eventually be rendered ineffective through loss of personnel.

Sooner or later a battery whose position le known to the enemy will be forced to change its position, a process that involves loss of time and efficiency, or, if it persist in remaining where it is, it will suffer losses in its detachments and will consequently deteriorate in fight power. Consequently, the best means of combating the enemy's artillery is to discover the position of his batteries and subsequently to harass them as much as poseible.

Searching Out.

The process of discovering is in active operation night and day along the whole front. It is not an easy problem to conceal a battery with its guns, ammunition stores, dugouts, billets, and personnel. A succession of airplane photographs, including its site, will sooner or later reveal the growth of a trench across a grass field, or the blast marks in front of the muzzle of a gun. A watchful observer in a balloon or observation post will see a flash in a certain direction, and by comparing his observation with those of others will be able to determine the spot upon the ground from which the flash originated. From that moment the suspected point is under continuous observation, both from the ground and from the air. Information is pieced together little by little, until the chain of evidence is complete. Then a mark is made upon a map at a central office, the battery is given a number and catslogued and its fate is sealed.

Upon the first occasion when atmospheric conditions are favorable orders are issued to one or more batteries to engage "Hostile Battery No. Z 15." An airplane goes up and ranges the batteries upon their target. When the range is found they can either proceed to a destructive shoot, or, if this is not required, they are in a position to neutralize the hostile battery at any time. This ranging is not always carried out by airplanes; other methods are available for the purpose if necessary. Airplane observation is, however, the simplest and most convenient.

This kind of work it is that is usually referred to in the communiquée as "artillery activity," and it is work in which the British have shown themselves to be far more efficient than the Germans. The latter freely admit the superiority of the Allies in technicel equipment, and it is the latter's undoubted ascendency in artillery and airplanes, and especially the effective and cordial co-operation between the two arms that exist in the allied armies, that accounts for the latter's success in these encounters. It need never be feared that in any "artillery duel" that may ensue the Germans have any prospect of being victorious.

I have received is the same—the German Army is about to make a huge assault on a scale at least equal to that of March 21, by which it hopes to bring about the end of the war.

Conditions Favor the Allies.

To one who views the situation dispassionately it seems that the trump cards, i. e., the absence of the surprise element, the failure of the previous effort, German inferiority in man power and artillery, the Allies', undoubted mastery of the air, and, last and greatest, the unity of command under Foch, are all in the hand of the Allies.

Yet Hindenburg and Ludendorff are about to take the chance. Why? There is only one answer: Because they cannot do otherwise. Despite their victories against the weaker allies, they have failed to beat down the principal forces of their opponents. Now by dread of the future—which can be spelled in the one word, "America"—and by difficulties at home they are at last forced to make their final throw against odds for defeat or victory.

The French and British are more than ready for them, and at last, which should be the source of supreme satisfaction at home, American troops are in line, prepared to take their part in the final battle for civilization and democracy.

PUSH HUNGARIAN REFORM.

Wekerle Announces New Fight in Budapest Parliament.

AMSTERDAM, May 12.—On presenting his new Cabinet to the Lower House of Parliament, Premier Wekerle said, a Budapest dispatch reports, that the Government was determined to reach an agreement on the question of franchise reform, although without prejudicing the principles of the bill. He asserted that this was possible without the support of the Opposition.

Former Premier Tisza welcomed the declaration of the Government. He said that he had serious objections to the bill and could vote for it only after certain amendments had been made.

GAS IS POISONING SWISS.

Troops on Alsatian Frontier Suffer from German Product.

GENEVA, May 12.—Swiss troops on the Alsatian frontier have begun to suffer from German poison gas floating back from the Western front toward the Rhine, Swiss newspapers say.

The civilian population along the Rhine has been warned to provide itself with gas masks.

The school children in Mülheim and Freiburg wear the gas masks daily.

GUARD NEW HYDROAIRPLANE

Great Precautions Taken Against Spies Where It Is Building.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, May 12.—Being assembled on a private estate near here and under the closest kind of guard is a hydro-airplene which in a few days will be inspected by Government officials. Because of rumors which reached officials, the guards in the last few days have been doubled, especially at night, when several motor boats have been seen near the estate.

It is known that during the last month Government officials have made very thorough investigations of private estates in this vicinity, looking for alien employes. Two days ago on the Pratt estate two Germans were taken by the officials because of their actions and conversations. Every foreign-born employe is being watched, and it is reported that numerous arrests will be made.

The hydroplane is being assembled under a tent and the trial flights will be made on Long Island Sound. When the employes started their work all persons entering the private estate received passes. Hardly had the work started than men having a foreign accent made an effort to gain entrance. They were ordered away, but since then they have been noticed about at intervals. The guards are armed heavily and are under orders to shoot at any one coming ashore.

TO SELL ONLY 'SHORT" BEERS

Brewers Cut Output and Warn Saloons to Serve Less.

George Ehret has served notice on saloons selling his beer that the Federal regulation reducing brewing by 30 per cent. had made it necessary for the brewers to ration the saloons, unless the saloons grappled with the situation individually. The methods under consideration by the saloons for rationing their customers to avoid running short in their supply is to reduce still further the size of beer glasses or to raise the price to 10 cents. The following ultimatum to saloon keepers, coupled with an appeal to patriotism, has been sent out by Mr. Ehret and is posted in the saloons of most of his customers:

"Federal regulations have placed a limitation upon our product. This means that we must reduce our brewing 30 per cent. compared with last year, thus necessitating a proportionate reduction in our sales.

"Our sales for the month of April and for the first ten days of May have not been curtailed to the designated 30 per cent., and this compels an immediate readjustment of our business dealings with you.

"Unless our customers by drastic control of the situation themselves voluntarily bring about the required curtailment within one week from date we will be forced to put into effect some form of a rationing system whereby all will be cut down proportionately to the output we are allowed under the Federal regulations.

"There must be an immediate and considerable decrease in your beer sales, and cooperation of beer must receive your immediate attention, otherwise you will compel us to make deliveries to you strictly on a ration basis. We suggest that you reduce the size of your glasses and your pints.

"We appeal to your patriotism to give us your hearty co-operation in this conservation movement."

REOPEN REFUSE PLANT CASE

Mayor Orders Inquiry Into Lake Island Garbage Disposal System.

Dr. Royal Copelsnd, Health Commissioner, yesterday directed Dr. Edward D. Wisely, head of the Health Department of Richmond Borough, to begin an investigation into the operation of the $1,000,000 municipal garbage disposal plant on Laks Island, S. I. Mayor Hylan's action through Dr. Copeland was regarded as reopening the long-drawn-out controversy which sectionalized Staten Island about a year ago.

Commissioner Copeland in ordering the investigation declared that his action had been taken because of complaints residents of Staten Island had made about odors the plant gave off. Dr. Wisely and a staff of experts will start investigating today. If they find that bad odors arising from the plant endanger the health of persons living near by, they are empowered by the law to order the plant closed until the conditions are rectified.

RESCUE SQUAD SAVES SHIP.

Finds Fire in False Bunkers of Freighter at Staten Island.

After the crew of the ship and scores of firemen of Staten Island companies had worked for two hours unsuccessfully to find a fire, which was causing smoke to pour last night from the coal bunkers of a new freight ship at the pier of the American Dock Company at Tompkinsville, S. I., the Rescue Squad, which was taken over from Manhattan on a fireboat, went down into the hold of the ship and found the fire in the false bunkers.

Water was poured into the ship for an hour or more until the blaze was out. The damage was estimated at $30,000, due mainly to the destruction of coal and to damage to the ship from heat. The ship was one recently requisitioned by the United States Government.

"Oh, for a QUIET office!"

THERE is not a business man anywhere who does not realize that typewriter noise handicaps thinking. "Oh, for a quiet office" has been a plaintive cry for years.

Typewriter noise dulls the edge of efficiency—dissipates concentration—sets your nerves on edge and makes you incapable of your best work.

Sometime today, the noise of the typewriter will interrupt your thinking. It may be 10 o'clock—it may be 11—it may be 4. But that interruption will come. And you know it!

CORNERS IN EGGS FOLLOW THE FLAG

Foraging Soldiers Make the Officers' Breakfasts in France Come High.

OUR MEN LIBERAL BUYERS

But One Detachment Stole a Red-Hot Stove in Order to Keep from Freezing.

By FLOYD P. GIBBONS.

Copyright, 1918, by the Chicago Tribune Co.

[THIRD ARTICLE.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY UNDER GENERAL FOCH IN FRANCE, May 12.—In an imposing château of the Second Empire, now presided over by an American heiress, wife of a French officer, was the regimental headquarters the night General Foch took over command. Its barns and outbuildings were the cleanest in France, according to individuals who have recently slept in so many barns that they feel qualified to judge.

"Painfully sanitary," said a young Lieutenant, who remarked that a tile floor might make the stable smell sweeter, but it hardly offered the slumbering possibilities of a straw shakedown. While a man arranged their blankets in the quarters the horses grazed and rolled in green paddocks fenced with white-painted rails. Cooks got busy with the eveninb meal, and men off duty started exploring two nearby villages.

Financial schemes are always a part of the explorations for the American soldier. It is seldom more than an hour after his arrival in a populated village before the stock market and board of trade are in full operation. These mobile establishments usually set up in the village square if headquarters doesn't happen to be located too close. There are plenty to play the rôles of bull and bear; there is much bidding and shouting of quotations.

Dealings are not in bushels of May wheat or shares in oils or rails. Delicacies are bartered commodities, and of these, eggs are the strongest. The German intelligence service could find no surer way of tracing the peregrinations of American troops about France than to follow up the string of eggless villages they leave behind.

Privates Corner the Egg Supply.

As soon as billets are located those without extra duty begin the egg canvass of a town. There is success for those who make the earliest start and strike the section with the most prolific hens. At various prices eggs are bought before the news of the American arrivals has caused the peasant to set up a new scale of charges.

The usual late starter and victim of the arrangement is the officer's striker, who has lost valuable time by having to take care of his officer's luggage and get the latter established in billets. It is then his duty to procure eggs for the officers' mess. By that time all natural egg resources have been obliterated, and the only available supply is cornered by the Soldiers' Board of Trade. The desired breakfast food may be obtained in that place only. It is the last and only resort of the striker, who is euphoniously known as "dog robber."

In the Board of Trade he finds soldiers with helmets full of eggs, which may be bought at anywhere from two to three times their original price. It is only by payment at such prices that an officer is able to obtain any.

If there is a surplus, the soldiers have ample belt-room to accommodate it. In a village tavern I saw one soldier eat fourteen eggs, which he ordered Madame to fry, in succession. I can believe it, because I saw it, but I also felt that she did not believe her eyes. The Captain of the Judge-Advocate's office also witnessed the gastronomic feat, and observed:

"Every one of those eggs was bought and paid for. Our department handles claims for all stolen or destroyed property, and we have yet to receive the first claim from this town. Of course, everyone the world over knows that a hungry man will steal to eat, and there are those who hold that theft for the purpose of satisfying the demands of the stomach is not theft. But our records show that the American soldier in France is willing to buy and capable of buying what he needs outside the ration allowance.

"Of course, we have some instances of stealing, but most of it is trivial. Recently we deducted from the pay of one whole battalion the cost of thirty-one cheeses which were taken from a railroad restaurant counter. The fact is that some of our troops en route were hungry, and the train was stopping only for five minutes, and the woman behind the counter didn't have time to even take, much less change, money offered; so the men grabbed the cheeses and ran out just in time to board the train as it was moving off.

A New Record for Theft in France.

"There was one case, though, in which Uncle Sam didn't have the heart to charge anyone. He paid the bill himself, and maybe if you could send the story back home the citizens who paid it would get a laugh worth the money. It happened during the recent cold spell, when some of our troops were traveling from the seaboard to the interior. They traveled in semi-open horse cars, and it was cold—damned cold!

"One train stopped in front of a small railroad station, and six soldiers with cold hands and feet jumped from the car and entered the waiting room, in the centre of which was a large square coal stove with red-hot sides. One man stood on another's shoulders and disjointed the stovepipe. At the same time two others placed poles under the bottom of the stove, lifted it off the floor, and walked out of the room with it.

"They placed it in the horse car, stuck the pipe out of one door, and were warm for the remainder of the trip. It was the first time in the history of that little village that anybody had ever stolen a red-hot stove. The French Government, now owning the railroads, made claim against us for 400 francs for the stove and 11 francs' worth of coal in it. Uncle Sam paid the bill and was glad to do it.

"I know of only one case to beat that one, and that concerned the infantryman who stole a hive full of honey and took the bees along with it. The medical department handled one aspect of the case and the Provost Marshal the other. The bees meted out some of the punishment, and we stung his pay for costs."

But there is one thing soldiers on the move find more difficult to steal, and that is sleep. So at least it seemed the next morning when we swung into the road at daybreak and continued the March north.

AUSTRO-RUMANIAN TREATY.

AMSTERDAM, May 12.—A legal and political supplementary treaty has been concluded between Austria-Hungary and Rumania, according to Vienna advices. A similar treaty has been concluded with Germany.

As security for the public debt service of Rumania and Bosnia and Hersegovina, respectively, so far as Austro-Hungarian subjects are concerned, Rumania pledges for five years the Rumanian National Bank balances and deposits at the German Reichsbank.

PERSHING'S NEPHEW AMONG THE WOUNDED

Major Richard B. Paddock, Son of Late General, Was Stationed Here Until 1916.

Major Richard B. Paddock of the regular army, who is reported slightly wounded in yesterday's casualty list, is a nephew of General Pershing and a West Pointer of the class of 1914. Major Paddock, who is in the Signal Corps, is a native of Wyoming and is 27 years old. On June 15, 1914, three days after his graduation from West Point, he married Miss Anne Cunningham, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Cunningham of 46 Hamilton Place, this city. Mrs. Paddock, accompanied by her little son, Richard B. Paddock, Jr., is now on her way to New York from California. She was notified by telegraph yesterday that her husband had been wounded, but was in no danger.

Major Paddock is the son of the late Brig. Gen. Paddock, who was one of the American officers killed in the advance on Peking in the Boxer uprising of 1900. His mother was a sister of General Pershing. She died in the early boyhood of Major Paddock, who was then taken charge of and reared by Miss May Pershing of Lincoln, Neb., General Pershing's sister. Miss Pershing is caring for little Warren Pershing, the only son of the American Commander in Chief.

After his graduation from West Point, Major Paddock, then a Lieutenant or artillery, was on duty in New York, and until 1916 was in charge of the Police Reserve Training Camp on Staten Island. When General Pershing was ordered to command the punitive expedition into Mexico in 1916, the Lieutenant was relieved of that duty and went to the border to serve under his uncle. General Pershing later succeeded to the command of the Southern Department, with headquarters in San Antonio. Major and Mrs. Paddock took a house in that city and General Pershing made his home with them.

The casualty list contains the names of four enlisted men from New York: Rudolph Sima, reported killed, 1,382 Avenue A; Joseph V. Rogers, dead of wounds, 1,513 Gravesend Avenue, Brooklyn; John Kuniski, severely wounded, 153 Sheffield Avenue, Brooklyn, and Herbert A. Schwartz, slightly wounded, 148 West Ninety-first Street, New York.

Private Rogers was a brother of Mrs. Ethel Becker of 244 Gravesend Avenue, Brooklyn. She said last night that she did not know her brother was in the army until she received word of his death from Washington. She last saw him on Thanksgiving Day of 1916, she said, and had not heard from him since. He was 19 years old.

"If Joe had to die," said Mrs. Becker, "I am glad he went gloriously fighting for his country."

It was pointed out yesterday that recent casualty lists seemed to indicate that the Sunset Division of the National Guard army, the division which followed the Rainbow to Europe, was now in action. The troops in this division, as its name indicates, are from the Middle and Far West.

Private Rudolph Sima, who is reported killed in action, was a Bohemian, 23 years old, who came to the United States four years ago. He enlisted in the regular army within a week after Congress declared war. His aged parents still live in Bohemia. He boarded before he entered the army with Mrs. Mary Kabatnik of 1,382 Avenue A. "Although he had only been in the country three years when war was declared," said Mrs. Kabatnik, "he was the first boy in this neighborhood to volunteer for the defense of the country. He was a true son of Bohemia, who hated Austria and loved America."

Private John Kuniska, reported slightly wounded, is a Pole who came to this country four years ago. He enlisted in the regular army on Decoration Day of last year with his chum, John Federick, another Pole with whom he made his home at 153 Sheffield Avenue, Brooklyn. Kuniska is 23 years old.

PRISONER'S CARE 'PRINCELY'

Captured German Airman Writes of Treatment by British.

LONDON, May 12.—The newspapers publish an extract from an intercepted letter written by a captured German airman to his parents. The German writes:

"We are here in Jaffa (Palestine), in a very nice English hospital, in absolutely first-class care. The doctors and sisters are first rate, very friendly. The treatment and food are splendid.

"My pilot and myself have a large, fine room to ourselves. It is absolutely princely. Yesterday, and today, too, we had many visitors, English flying officers, all very friendly. They brought us books, chocolates, cigarettes, &c. As yet we have only been astonished at our treatment, because is is so good."

A Message from Saks

About Fine Clothes for Men

THOROUGHBRED clothes, modeled in the pick of the world's best woolens by men who for years have manipulated shears and needle so constantly, so persistently, so painstakingly that their productions have long been considered rare studies of what skillful handling of shears and needle can do.

More Saks suits are worn each season by men of affairs than can be said of any other ready tailored clothing in the Greater City. And this because critical New Yorkers have learned from experience that for style that is new, for clothes that are distinctive, for tailoring second-to-none in America, there is no place so good for a man to satisfy his clothing requirements as at Saks.

There's a Scarcity of Woolens---But Our Stocks Do Not Show It

We have a range of patterns more numerous, and more tasteful in their conception than the highest priced merchant tailors have ever shown

Among Our Styles

Single breasters with patch, flap, welt or slash pockets. Fitted or semi-form tracing, different in line to any other suits—conceived and developed right here on Broadway.

Two and three-button double-breasters that are a season ahead of most clothes. They have an ease of contour and finesse of finish that should set the whole of Manhattan talking.

Woolens and Patterns

They're simply multitudinous. It would seem as though the looms of the world had submitted their "plums" for our choice. Not a mediocre pattern in the lot—but plenty of "stars."

And the colorings are such as only the artist at the loom could blend. Tri-colorings, everything in plains from Blues to new Greys, pin Checks, Stripes that are different, and mottled effects that must be seen to be appreciated.

Prices $23 to $53 with the profit of middlemen eliminated

Give Them a Chance

The patriotism of the prisoners at Sing Sing in organizing a Liberty Loan campaign among themselves suggests an opportunity for prison reformers that they have not grasped.

Why not give the inmates of the jails and reformatories a chance to redeem themselves at the battle front? Possibly all of them would jump at the chance to get out and undoubtedly most of them would perhaps be animated by a higher purpose. We have thrilling stories from France of the Apache, for example, redeeming himself at the front and now wearing the Croix de Guerre, and of many a British ne'er-do-well distinguishing himself by deeds of valor and heroism. We cannot conceive that an American would less distinguish himself.

In New York State alone there are some 5,000 men confined to institutions and in round numbers throughout the United States not less than 100,000. Here is a body of men not all nor altogether responsible for the acts that have put them away, and, in part at least, sufficiently responsible mentally to fight for America.

Let our prison reformers give these men a chance to retrieve themselves, and, in popular phrase, to "come back." Further, let it be remembered that we are paying taxes for the keep of these men; the proposed plan would enable us to save this expense.

The Harriman National Bank commends this subject to the attention of the prison associations and the many individuals who have devoted themselves to the convict question.

SPEED UP, AMERICA! LABOR MEN'S PLEA

United States Mission Abroad Says We Must Aid Allies to Our Utmost.

UNDER FIRE AT THE FRONT

Delegates Found Our Troops to be in Excellent Spirits and Anxious to Fight.

LONDON, May 12.—The American labor representatives, who have returned to London after a visit to France, were under fire several times on their trip to the front, but none of them was hit. William Short, President of the Seattle Federation of Labor, described the experiences of the delegates at the American front in an interview today.

"The American boys seem to be in excellent spirits and anxious to do a lot more fighting than they have been privileged to do thus far," he said. "They are much elated at the possibility of more fighting. We were under fire several times during the journey, but none of us was struck."

On being asked for his impression as to the general situation, Mr. Short replied:

"Everything we have seen in France and Great Britain has emphasized the conviction we had when we came here, that America must get into this with both hands and both feet. She must use all her resources and send over the greatest number of men possible. We know Germany can be whipped, but the sooner America sends all her resources the sooner the job will be finished. It is not going to be finished until that is done, and every day lost, every man withheld, is merely causing unnecessary sacrifices.

"That is the message we are going to take back to our people. We know Great Britain and France have done more than their share. They have done all they can do, and much more than they ought to have had to do without the aid of the whole civilized world. This has been a fight for civilization from the beginning, and the greatest mistake of the whole situation has been the failure of America and other countries to recognize this.

"The most conclusive evidence we have seen of the failure of the enemy's submarine campaign is the huge American army in France and the hundreds of thousands of tons of stores brought across the Atlantic," said James Wilson, chairman of the delegation.

"These vast munitions of war," he added, "stands as irrefutable proof of the protective power of the British and American Navies. Less than twelve months have passed since General Pershing landed in France with fifty men. The developments which have taken place since seem little short of miraculous. We were amazed at the work of the supermen of the British and American Armies.

"Everywhere among the American troops is a feeling of absolute confidence in their power to withstand successfully any offensive launched against them. Their spirit, like that of the British and French troops, is wonderful."

TO GIVE MILITARY FETE.

Fort Hamilton to Have Benefit for the Red Cross.

Military events, including an "over the top" bayonet charge, will be among the features of the lawn fête which is to be held at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, on Friday, from 2 until 11 P. M., for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

Prominent artists are to appear in the program arranged, and the price of the tickets, $5, will include mess and dancing in the evening. Percy Grainger is to play, and Mme. Jacoby, among others, will be heard in selections. Movies and lawn tennis exhibition games will also be among the attractions. Colonel Skerrett of Fort Hamilton is directing the fete, from whom tickets may be had, also at the Red Cross booth at the Biltmore.

A Quartermaster's steamer will leave the Battery for the fort at two-hour intervals beginning at 1 P. M. on Friday.

ASK AID FOR WORK HORSES.

Women's League for Animals Names May 16 as Tag Day.

In an effort to raise funds to care for thousands of horses in the city during the hot weather, a tag day has been set for next Thursday, May 16, by the New York Women's League for Animals. The sum to be raised is set at $5,000, by Mrs. James Speyers, President of the league. The tags will cost 25 cents each. The money will be used to employ necessary men to be stationed at traffic centres and for the purchase of hose and pails and medicines to prevent the spread of disease among horses in the Summer months.

An appeal for funds which is being sent to all horse owners, signed by Mrs. Speyer, Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt, Mrs. M. Orme Wilson and Mrs. Lewis Gouverneur Morris, reads:

"Facilities for watering horses are limited. Without the open hydrant supplied by us there would be extreme suffering and a heavy death rate among horses during the Summer. Along the hot river fronts we have daily supplied water for thousands of horses used in transporting freight for the Allies. We have watered hundreds of horses used in distributing coal and milk in different sections of the city. We feel the necessity of continuing this work and hope for co-operation."

Besides keeping the watering stations, the league last year gave fifteen hundred Summer bridles to horse owners. It was found that some of the bridles, taken from horses' heads weighed from twelve to sixteen pounds, whereas the special Summer bridles weighed but a few ounces.

WORK FOR WAR CRIPPLES.

Pennsylvania Lists Places Open to 42,111 Veterans.

HARRISBURG, Penn., May 12.—In the Bureau of Employment of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry extensive card files, recently installed, indicate where 42,111 soldiers, sailors, and marines, crippled or permanently disabled through war service, may find in this State suitable employment despite their disabilities.

Many of the openings are in skilled tasks that may be performed by men who have lost one or both legs of an arm. Places of employment include steel mills, silk mills, railroads, cigar factories, dairies, paper mills, lumber camps, and department stores. This classification has been made possible by the responses of Pennsylvania employers to a questionnaire sent from the Department of Labor and Industry early this year.

MRS. W. G. BROWN IN RENO.

Head of Federation of Clubs to Sue for Divorce.

The fact that Mrs. William Grant Brown, President of the New York State Federation of Women's Clubs, had gone to Reno, Nev., more than a month ago to establish a residence for a divorce suit, became known yesterday. While Mr. Brown, a lawyer with offices in the Woolworth Building, declined yesterday to discuss the case, he admitted that trouble had come between him and his wife over what he said his wife's relatives described as "incompatibility."

Mrs. Brown, whose maiden name was Cluett, is the daughter of a hotel man in Schenectady, N. Y. She was married to William G. Brown in 1899. They have no children. Until a month ago they made their home in the Hotel Bretton Hall.

According to Mr. Brown, the first inkling he had of any "incompatibility" happened several weeks ago when his wife's parents visited him and said that Mrs. Brown had gone to Reno. Up to that time the husband said he had thought she was merely going to California for her health. Mr. Brown added that beyond that he knew nothing of the matter.

What Our Red Cross Is

The American National Red Cross is, by Act of Congress, the official medium of communication between the people of the United States and their Army and Navy.

The President of the United States is the President of the Red Cross.

The War Department audits its accounts.

The work of the Red Cross for the war period is directed by a War Council created by President Wilson on May 10, 1917.

In a statement announcing the appointment of the War Council, the President said:

"The best way in which to impart the greatest efficiency and energy to the relief work which this war will entail will be to concentrate it in the hands of a single experienced organization which has been recognized by law and by international convention as the public instrumentality for such purposes. Indeed, such a concentration of administrative action in this matter seems to me absolutely necessary, and I hereby earnestly call upon those who can contribute either great sums or small to the alleviation of the suffering and distress which must inevitably arise out of this fight for humanity and democracy, to contribute to the Red Cross."

The Red Cross organization is world-wide

The American Red Cross today is world-wide. It reaches into every American village, and overreaches all national boundaries. There are chapters in our insular territories and in practically every Allied and Neutral country in the world: in Hawaii, the Philippines and Porto Rico, in Cuba and Guatemala, in London and Paris, and the Eastern countries.

A year ago there were 562 chapters in the United States and 486,194 members. Today there are 8,551 chapters, 11,000 branches, 50,000 auxiliaries, 22,000,000 adult members, and a Junior Membership comprising a large proportion of the school children of the land.

American citizenship and Red Cross membership are coming to be coincident terms.

Red Cross ideals

The strength of the Red Cross is in its ideals. The War Council expresses these ideals in three great aims:

1 To be ready to care for our soldiers and sailors on duty wherever and whenever that care may be needed.

2 To shorten the War—by strengthening the morale of the allied peoples and their armies, by alleviating their sufferings in the period which must elapse until the American army can become fully effective abroad.

3 To lay foundations for an enduring peace—by extending a message of practical relief and sympathy to the civilian population among our Allies, carrying to them an expression of the finest side of the American character.

The American people are translating these ideals into facts—into money and personal service. Last June the War Council asked for $100,000,000, and the people pledged $110,000,000, of which $108,000,000 has thus far been collected—collected at probably the lowest cost of collection in the history of such undertakings.

The Red Cross active workers are estimated at millions, and they are doing almost everything known to commerce and science, from bookkeeping to surgery, from knitting socks to feeding American prisoners in Germany.

The generosity of the American people keeps pace with the fast-growing scope of Red Cross activities. The growth of Red Cross has been so amazing, the multiplication of its activities so rapid, that few can be expected to know all that Red Cross means to the world in this hour of the world's need. Many who are active in one Red Cross endeavor are unfamiliar with scores of other Red Cross pursuits.

How Red Cross is organized

The great secret of Red Cross effectiveness is organization. Millions of people are working together through the medium of an organized machinery which co-ordinates the work of each with the work of all, and transmits the vast quantity of finished products to the people who need them. Thus benevolent emotion is turned into practical aid.

The organization co-relates and directs the work of the chapters, co-operates with the Army and Navy in relief measures, supports relief work abroad, recruits the personnel for overseas service and forwards to its agents in foreign lands the relief supplies produced by the chapter workers or purchased in the market.

Red Cross administration in the United States is decentralized. Red Cross is too vast to be completely administered from one spot. It would disintegrate under its own weight.

So the country is partitioned into thirteen Divisions, and there is a fourteenth Division for the territorial, insular and foreign chapters, with National Headquarters as the co-ordinating force. In each Division there is a manager and his staff, to whom the chapter officials are responsible, and the chapter workers deal directly with the Chapter Officers. The organization is military in its well ordered effort, but quite non-military in its democratic equalities, for the chapter worker is quite as important as the National Headquarters official. The Red Cross is organized for efficiency, not for display of authority.

Volunteer service

All of the Division Managers, and many of those on their staffs, are volunteers. Unpaid service is the general rule in chapters, divisions, and at National Headquarters. Most of the department heads in Washington are volunteers.

Service at National Headquarters

Washington Headquarters is a type and sample of the sort of service that Red Cross commands all over the country, high talent without remuneration. The staff is drawn from all parts of the country, made up of men and women experienced in large affairs, with various talents, each fitted into the department where his or her particular talent serves best.

The treasurer of the Red Cross is the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States.

The comptroller of the Red Cross is the comptroller of a great national corporation.

Civilian relief work is directed by one of America's ablest experts in social service work. Men of wide experience in purchasing, warehousing, and shipping conduct these several activities of Red Cross.

Noted physicians and surgeons constitute the Advisory Medical Board, and some of the most distinguished nurses of the country, the corresponding Committee on Nursing Service.

Red Cross technical activities are in the hands of technical experts.

Every dollar of the war fund goes to war relief

Red Cross affairs are economically administered. Every penny has been spent under an appropriation by the War Council after careful study. Membership dues pay the entire cost of operation, with a large balance for the handling of disaster relief and other work.

The work of women

In all the volunteer service of Red Cross none is more notable for devotion, none so notable for extent as that which the loyal women of America are giving in their chapter work. It is estimated that there are two million of these women, many giving most of their time to this work, all giving unstintingly. It is they who do the handiwork of Red Cross; its surgical dressings, hospital garments, knitted garments. To meet the demand for these articles, appropriations of $11,000,000 for raw materials have been necessary so far. During the month of April, 1918, the women of the country produced approximately 25,000,000 surgical dressings,

400,000 hospital garments,
500,000 knitted garments,
400,000 pieces of clothing for refugees, and many other important and useful articles.

The chapters are performing other great tasks. They are helping dependent families of soldiers and sailors. It is estimated that 100,000 such families are receiving help from the Red Cross at the present day.

Co-operation with the Army and Navy

The Red Cross is in close co-operation with the military authorities of the country.

Officers of the Army, the Navy and the United States Public Health Service are assigned to National Headquarters of the Red Cross to ensure a thorough understanding at all times of the ways in which Red Cross service can be most helpful.

By order of the Secretary of War, a Red Cross representative and an appropriate number of assistants are accredited to each camp and cantonment, to each division of the army in the field, and to all army base hospitals. These Red Cross men, and others attached to naval training stations and hospitals and working in co-operation with the military authorities, provide emergency hospital and other supplies where needful, keep the men in the hospital in touch with their families, and in many other ways add to the comfort and morale of our men.

Red Cross Commissions operate in France, Belgium, Italy, Greece, Serbia, Russia, Roumania, Palestine and Great Britain. The Commissions and their staffs are in the theatres of war, co-operating with the Army and Navy forces and with the military and civil authorities of the Allied Countries; co-operating also with other relief agencies, avoiding duplication of effort and confusion of purpose, assisting other agencies and assisted by them.

As in Headquarters at home, so on the Commissions, are men and women of great ability, using their talents and their experience where they are most needed.

These Commissions estimate the budgets for foreign relief, and the appropriations are made by the War Council after carefully scrutinizing and sometimes amending the budgets.

What the Red Cross does

The story of Red Cross accomplishment and its plans for the future will be told in more detail in other statements. Here are some of its principal activities, which suggest the importance and scope of its work:

Organization of base-hospitals and ambulance companies, recruiting and training of nursing personnel for service in the army and navy medical corps, production of surgical dressings, hospital garments, refugee clothing, knitted goods, emergency supply service for our Army and Navy at home and abroad, sanitary service around cantonments, care of dependent families of soldiers and sailors,

study of the problem of crippled soldiers and sailors,

canteen service for troops en route,

feeding of American prisoners in enemy countries,

casualty information,

service to convalescents,

disaster relief,

and relief for our Allies, including canteen work, tubercular work, hospital supply service, ambulance and hospital service, dispensaries, recreation centers, reconstruction of homes and villages, maternity work, repatriation of refugees, rehabilitation of mutilated men and many other forms of service.

The Red Cross supplements the work of the Army and Navy. The Red Cross War Council is endeavoring in every way to increase the effectiveness of the whole program of relief by the utmost co-operation with the Commission on Training Camp Activities, the Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, Y. W. C. A., Y. M. H. A. and other great patriotic agencies.

Red Cross Chapters have statements showing in detail how the War Fund is being expended. Ask your Chapter for these statements.

AMERICANS ALL GIVE ONE DAY TO MOTHER

Every Soldier in France, Even in the Trenches, Takes Time to Write a Letter Home.

WHITE FLOWERS DECK KHAKI

Prayers for Consolation for the Mothers of the Nation Said in Many Churches.

Americans in every quarter of the globe yesterday united in one tender thought—the memory of their mothers. By the wireless and the cable, Americans in every port and clime were apprised that yesterday was Mothers' Day and that President Wilson in a message to the American people suggested that reverence be paid to the devotion of American mothers who are so patriotically offering their sons to the nation's needs in the present crisis.

Mothers' Day was also a day of prayer, and in American churches in this country and elsewhere congregations united in words of supplication to console the mothers of the nation whose sons are in camp and on the firing line.

White flowers pinned on the khaki uniforms of the more than 500,000 American soldiers in France told of the memory in the heart of the men of the American Expeditionary Forces. Dispatches to the National War Work Council of the Young Men's Christian Association told the story of the celebration of Mothers' Day in France.

Here is part of a dispatch received yesterday by the War Work Council on the observance of Mothers' Day by our soldiers:

"There is not an American soldier in France, even in the front lines, with a mother at home, who isn't writing to her today. Those trench letters have to be done in rather a hurry, they're all in pencil, they're scribbled, for the most part.

"Early this morning Y. M. C. A. men began to take stationery to the trenches, and to carry back the first letters written. Midnight tonight finds the censors still at work on the envelopes marked 'Mother's letter.' The other mail can wait, if it must. Mother comes first today.

"A new password was given this morning. The first Y. M. C. A. men who came with supplies said 'Mothers' Day' in answer to the sentry's 'Who's there?' Presently one of them shortened this to 'Mother,' in his haste.

"'Pass, Mother' the sentry said. And so mother, or the spirit of mother, passed into the trenches.

"She isn't just in the trenches, either, but all over France. Never again will the French believe that baseball is our greatest national institution. They think that mothers are.

"An American soldier bought a white carnation at a flower stall in Paris. The old Frenchwoman who sold it to him refused to take his franc. He was just able to gather, from her torrent of French, that she had sons in the army, too, and that the flower was his, with her compliments to Madame his mother.

"It was pretty quiet in most of the 'Y' huts—just the steady scratch-scratch of pens driving home across the paper. Twice the usual allowance of paper was given to each soldier. No postcard or half-pint measure of letter would do for mother on her day.

"Some of the men sweated over their letters. One grizzled chap, considerably past draft age, said it was the first time in five years he had written home, 'but this Mother's day thing sort o' gets you.' A lanky boy protested when a Secretary started to take the letter he had written, to send it with the others to the censor.

"'It ain't a real letter,' the boy explained, turning red. 'I haven't any mother—never had. But all the other fellows were writing, and I thought I'd throw a bluff.'

"The usual amusements of the day were all passed by in favor of mother. The moving pictures were of the kind to bring the home folks to mind. In one of the huts where a phonograph was pounding out a noisy, ragtime tune an American soldier choked it off and searched through the records till he came to Kipling's "Mother o' Mine."

If I were drowned in the deepest sea,
Mother o' mine, mother o' mine,
I know whose love would come down to me,
Mother o' mine, mother o' mine.

"There was silence in that hut for a time after the record was finished. Tears stood in the eyes of some of the men in khaki, and they didn't care."

Greetings Are Sent to Mothers by Men of Old 69th Regiment

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 11, (Associated Press.)—The following messages have been telegraphed to correspondents' headquarters, with the request that they be transmitted to New York and Missouri papers:

"To the home folks of the 165th Infantry: Your boys at the front send loving greetings on Mothers' Day. COLONEL."

"To the Signal Corps mothers of Kansas City: Missouri officers and men of the signal battalion send loving greetings on Mothers' Day. It is especially sacred in France, and every man is writing home. Health exceptionally good. GARRET."

The 165th Infantry is the former Sixty-ninth Regiment of the New York National Guard.

DELUGE OF LETTERS STARTS.

France, Too, Observes the Day—Joffre Makes Speech.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 12, (Associated Press.)—From army posts scattered throughout France a deluge of Mothers' Day letters was pouring in tonight upon the American Army Post Office. Tomorrow they will be on their way to the base ports for shipment home by the next steamer.

From the appearance of the stuffed mail sacks few members of the American Expeditionary Force neglected the opportunity to write. Of course, many officers and men have lost their mothers, so they used the special envelopes to write to their sisters and other next of kin, wives or sweethearts. But the great bulk of the letters was for waiting mothers "back there."

The letters were written in Young Men's Christian Association huts, Salvation Army cabins, and in billets in little French towns, while a great quantity were composed laboriously in muddy trenches and dugouts.

Announcement that the letters would be treated as special delivery matter and General Pershing's notice to all ranks caused many of the men, who had not written as much as they should, to remember their relatives on the other side of the ocean.

PARIS, May 12.—Marshal Joffre presided today at a meeting of the French Homes Society to celebrate Mothers' Day.

The meeting today was attended by many American, French, and other allied officers. Marshal Joffre was cheered loudly. He opened the meeting with a brief speech in which he referred to the splendid effort of the United States in the war. He said the purpose of the society was to open French homes to American boys and as far as possible to give them the comforts they had left behind.

Professor Henri Bergson of the University of Paris made an address in which he spoke of the accomplishments of the American Army and people in the war for liberation of the world.

Mothers' Day was celebrated in all American churches in France. There were special sermons, many American preachers making reference to Joan of Arc, just as French clergymen, speaking of her fête day, brought in a reference to Mothers' Day.

White carnations were distributed to American soldiers by the Young Men's Christian Association.

CONSTANTINE HAS RELAPSE.

Family Again Called to Bedside of Ex-King of Greece.

PARIS, May 12.—Former King Constantine of Greece, who is ill at Zurich and recently was reported to have passed the danger point, is now said in a Zurich dispatch to the Petit Journal to be in a very grave condition. He has had a relapse, and has a high fever.

All the members of the royal family gathered about his bedside yesterday. Some of the Princes who were at Lucerne, Lausanne, and other resorts were recalled to Zurich by telegraph.

LUBIN TURNS TO ZIONISTS.

American Delegate Now Favors Restoration of Jewish Homeland.

Declaring that Zionism under the guidance and protection of England was a far different proposal from Zionism at the sufferance and under the protection of Turkey, David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture with headquarters at Rome, Italy, has come over to the side of those who favor the restoration of a Jewish national homeland, according to a letter Mr. Lubin wrote to the Provisional Zionist Committee and which was given out by the committee yesterday. Mr. Lubin points out that England will be the gainer by the establishment of such a State, for it will be a stanch ally of the British. In his letter he says:

"My former opposition was based on the then generally accepted belief that the realization of Zionism depended on the good will of the Turk and was to be under his guidance and protection. I now see that the promulgation of the mission of Israel demands a world centre, a world authority, whence the forces actuating it could radiate in every direction. Adaptability is a well-known trait of the Jew; he soon learns to adapt himself to meet the needs of his new environment. As in the United States, there could be representative government with complete separation of Church and State. Besides, England would, no doubt, approve the Constitution under which the government, the law-making, and law-enforcing functions, would be carried on. This Constitution would, no doubt, carry with it the proviso that all be done in conformity with the common law of England."

CITY CHURCHES HELP SALVATIONIST FUND

Pastors Appeal for Oversubscription of New York's Quota in War Drive.

MOVIES ALSO GIVE AID

Yesterday's Total Unknown, as Captains Did Not Report—Mrs. Straight Gives $5,000.

The campaign of the Salvation Army to raise $250,000 for war work continued with renewed vigor yesterday, special appeals being made in many churches and motion-picture theatres. As the team captains did not report last night, the increase from Saturday night's total of $100,108 remains unknown, but is said to be encouraging.

At the Strand Theatre a motion picture was shown describing the war activities of the Salvation Army in this country before it had sent trained workers and supplies abroad. A collection was taken up at the theatre by khaki-clad Salvation Army lassies.

In many of the churches members of the Salvation Army made direct appeals to the congregations, and in some cases the ministers themselves urged their congregations to hasten their subscriptions so that New York's quota of $250,000 in the national drive for $2,000,000 would be oversubscribed.

George Gordon Battle, Chairman of the General Campaign Committee, issued the following statement yesterday:

"For a whirlwind finish of the drive this coming week we need three things—workers for teams, automobiles, and money. The public is awakening to the fact that the Salvation Army has all along merited substantial and adequate aid in its war work, and New York is not going to let this endeavor lag. If it did the disappointment would not be any greater on the part of the hundreds of Salvationists toiling in the huts in France than on the part of General Pershing's returned veterans who brought a red-hot message from their comrades in the trenches, and who have by speech and petition asked New York to see this drive through to success quickly because of the practical results being secured by our soldiers at the battlefront.

"The public has not fully understood that this money is being raised exclusively for war work, nor has it been aware of the extent of the work that has been done for our American troops, and that must still be done. In the great machine that grinds on each day toward victory for the American cause this Salvation Army forms a vital, indispensable cog, and the American public must understand that fact and be guided accordingly.

"The largest single subscription to the drive was received yesterday from Mrs Willard Straight, who sent a check for $5,000 to the headquarters of the Salvation Army, 122 West Fourteenth Street, with a note expressing the hope that the Salvation Army would be fully supported by the American people in their "magnificent and practical work at the front."

COLUMBIA OFFERS WARTIME COURSES

Instruction in Military Tactics Required of All Candidates for Bachelor's Degree.

ENTRANCE RULES CHANGED

Examination Requirements Lessened for Applicants of Demonstrated Proficiency in Secondary Schools.

Several new war service courses will be offered to Columbia College students next year, according to the announcement for the 1918-19 session which has just appeared. Among these are the compulsory course described in the catalogue as "Military Tactics and Manoeuvre," and a course in navigation, which is to be presented in conjunction with astronomy.

A new plan of admission to the freshman class that diminishes for highly proficient applicants the examination bugbear is outlined in the announcement. Under the old plan of admission the candidate was examined in each of the fifteen units required for entrance. Beginning this Fall, however, candidates who have completed a satisfactory secondary school course "with a high degree of proficiency" will be permitted to satisfy the examination requirements by means of what are known as "comprehensive examinations" in not less than four subjects, including those prescribed for admission. These four subjects will be English, mathematics, a foreign language, and one other subject to be elected by the applicant with the approval of the university authorities.

Every physically fit student in the college will be compelled to take the course in "Military Tactics and Manoeuvre," to be given by Colonel John P. Finley, retired, who was recently designated by the War Department to take charge of the officers' training corps at Columbia this Fall. The course counts one point at each session toward a bachelor's degree, occupies four hours a week, is supplemented by physical training for two hours a week, and is required of all students in Columbia College unless excused by the Department of Physical Education."

What was listed in last year's announcement as "Astronomy II—General Astronomy" is now listed as "Astronomy II—Navigation." Professor Harold Jacoby has revised the course so that it will meet war conditions.

A change in the science requirement for admission affects a number of high school students in this city. According to Professor A. L. Jones, Director of University Admissions, a sound course in biology may be offered in place of the former requirements. Many New York City schools are offering such a course now. All students who expect to offer some of their professional courses toward an A. B. degree, said Professor Jones, would have to spend at least three years in Columbia College as a requisite for the academic degree.

In estimating the average student's expenses for the benefit of those planning to enter, the announcement says that for a student taking 16 points a session, Winter and Spring, the average cost for the year will be $720. Tuition will be $196. If he is economical, the announcement says, his expenses may not rise above $545 for the year. These are the estimates of expenses, excluding tuition:

	Low.	Av.	Liberal.
Books	$14	$20	$26 up
Room, (37 weeks)	90	129	180 up
Board, (37 weeks)	185	197	255 up
Clothing and laundry work,	44	100	182 up
College Incidentals	10	23	46 up
Miscellaneous	26	56	103 up

"While students of exceptional qualifications have been uniformly successful in obtaining work," says the announcement regarding the University employment bureau, "no prospective student should come to Columbia expecting to depend entirely, or even largely, upon the assistance of the office, and every student should be prepared to meet at least the expenses of the first session."

KING DECORATES NURSES.

Miss McCafferty, a Canadian, Receives the Royal Red Cross.

ST. JOHN, N. B., May 12.—Miss Edith McCafferty of this city, now matron of a Canadian officers' hospital at Derby, England, has been decorated by King George with the Royal Red Cross, first class. The investiture, relatives here learned today, took place at Buckingham Palace on April 6. Miss McCafferty is a graduate of St. John's Hospital, Lowell, Mass.

King George pinned the insignia on Miss McCafferty's uniform, and later she and other nurses similarly honored were received at tea by Queen Mother Alexandra at Marlborough House.

HONOR SEAMEN'S SOCIETY.

Special Religious Services Mark the Ninetieth Anniversary of Founding.

Special services in the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, at Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street, at which were many naval officers and sailors in uniform, marked the celebration yesterday of the ninetieth anniversary of the American Seamen's Friend Society. In the course of the address of the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Malcolm J. MacLeod, he said:

"No class of men bring a larger contribution to civilization than do our sailors. We owe to our sailor boys a debt we can never repay. The progress in seamanship and shipbuilding have made the sea a connecting link between nations instead of a barrier, as it was once regarded. The sea today is the great bond of human brotherhood."

In a brief reference to the history of the society the Secretary, the Rev. George S. Webster, announced that the aggregate attendance for the year was 183,000 at the Sailors' Home and Institute, at 507 West Street. A building for the use of seamen in the Panama Canal Zone is soon to be erected by the society.

STEFANSSON GIVES UP TRIP.

Explorer Is Better, but His Recovery Will Be Slow, Doctors Say.

Vilhjalmur Stefansson, th arctic explorer, who was stricken with typhoid fever on the Herschel Islands early this year, is recovering slowly, but will not be able to continue the expedition he had undertaken, according to a telegram received by the Explorers' Club yesterday. The message, dated Saturday, was signed by the explorer himself, and said that he was convalescing at the Episcopal Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska. He was taken there last month. Stefansson, who started last Fall on an arctic trip under authority of the Canadian Government, expected to complete his explorations and make a lecture tour of the United States and Canada, starting in September, for the benefit of the Canadian Red Cross and other war charities. His message stated that his doctors have advised him that three to six months must elapse before he can undertake any hard work or serious responsibility, without grave danger."

The explorer's telegram said that he was established "with delightful surroundings and competent doctors and nurses. It is an ideal place for a rest, which is now the main thing. There seems to be no danger of a setback, but recovery is slow. I am the guest of Archdeacon Stuck, which assures me every possible attention."

Because They're Good Hotels

The Statler Hotels are well patronized, and well spoken of, and well-known everywhere because they are good hotels.

That explains, too, why there are four Statlers. The first one built (at Buffalo, 1907), gave travelers some new ideas about what constitutes hotel goodness. Those ideas, as expressed in Statler equipment, and policies, and operating practice, were so successful that other Statler Hotels were opened at Cleveland (1912), and Detroit (1914), and St. Louis (1917). Each of them was successful from the first—because the Statlers are good hotels.

So Here's New York

Now the Pennsylvania Railroad is building a hotel in New York—to be opened in the fall. It will be the largest hotel in the world, as befits a hotel erected by America's greatest railway system in America's first city.

And, because the Statler Hotels are good hotels, this new Hotel Pennsylvania, in New York, will be Statler-operated. It is being equipped with the typical Statler comfort-features and conveniences which travelers like so well; it will be operated under the Statler policies of a full and liberal money's worth, and guaranteed satisfaction, to every patron; it will provide in New York the kind of good hotel which is so successful in these other American cities—taking advantage of all the opportunities for betterment which are possible only in this biggest American city, and in a location opposite America's most important railway terminal.

Use These Good Hotels

Every—every—Statler bedroom has private bath, circulating icewater and numerous other unusual conveniences. And here is an instance of Statler service to guests: when you wake you find a morning paper under your door—but you don't find a charge for it in your bill.

The Statlers are unique among hotels of the first class in their reasonable and well-balanced rates-schedules. More than 60% of their 3,100 rooms (in four cities) are priced at $3 a day and less. Rooms (with bath) from $2.

To All Dealers in Ice:—

The price of ice fixed for family trade within the City of New York, in large or small quantities, is 50c. per cwt., the same price as that which prevailed last year. This price must be maintained during the season of 1918. Numerous complaints have come to this office concerning overcharges by dealers, and this is to GIVE NOTICE that such overcharges are contrary to the regulations established by me under and pursuant to the laws of the State of New York, and the dealer so overcharging is liable to prosecution and revocation of license.

Complaints of violations should be made to the Ice Comptroller, at 120 Broadway, Manhattan, giving license number, name and address of the dealer.

Inspectors will be appointed by me to follow up all complaints, and the law will be invoked to punish all offenders.

B. B. ODELL, Ice Comptroller.

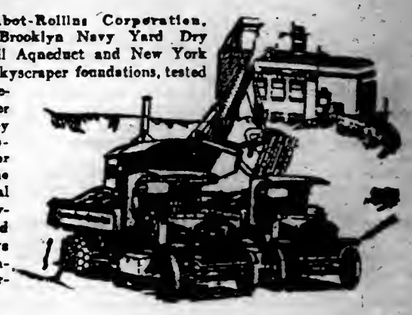
Initial price or ultimate cost?

THE 5-ton Pierce-Arrow truck is the highest priced truck on the market. The 5-ton Pierce-Arrow truck is the cheapest truck to buy on the market.

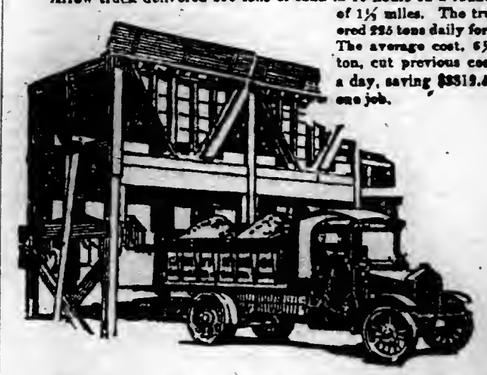
Every one delivers more than the service expected of it. It delivers without interruption over a long period of years. It delivers a given aggregate of work in the least time. On these, true economy is based. Initial price is an incident in the end achieved.

There is more opportunity for comparative tests in the contracting business than in any other. So the Pierce-Arrow record, serving contractors, is especially significant. Here are typical examples:

The Holbrook-Cabot-Rollins Corporation, working on the Brooklyn Navy Yard Dry Docks, the Catskill Aqueduct and New York Subways and on skyscraper foundations, tested thoroughly the Pierce-Arrow and three other makes of trucks. They bought 16 Pierce-Arrows and none other since they bought the first one. In Terminal excavations in Newark these trucks saved $550 a day for 90 days and paid for themselves in this operation.



The McKelvy-Hine Construction Company in a trial test of a Pierce-Arrow truck delivered 990 tons of sand in 10 hours on a round trip haul of 1½ miles. The truck delivered 925 tons daily for 125 days. The average cost, 6½ cents a ton, cut previous costs $96.50 a day, saving $3819.50 on this one job.



We have actual records of Pierce-Arrow trucks in many businesses. Ask us what experiences we have had with conditions like yours.

PIERCE-ARROW
Motor Trucks

The only safe comparison is the comparison of actual service under identical conditions. Whenever such tests have been made between leading makes of trucks, the Pierce-Arrow has invariably delivered the greatest aggregate for the least cost—in work done, in time saved, operating and maintenance expense or minimum of idle time. All the big Pierce-Arrow installations were made on this basis—of proven efficiency.

BORGLUM TO GIVE REPLY TO SENATE

Brandegee, He Writes President, Will Present Affidavits on Mix Charges Tomorrow.

NAMES BAKER AS PLOTTER

Says Secretary Was Party to Effort to Discredit Him and Deceive the President.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—In a letter written to President Wilson today and made public tonight, Gutzon Borglum, the sculptor, demands the fullest investigation into the aircraft production situation, and makes known that on Tuesday Senator Brandegee will present to the Senate "detailed evidence, together with affidavits attached, relating to the falsehoods and deliberate 'frame-up' by a confessed tool of Colonel Deeds and this man's engineer."

Mr. Borglum accuses Secretary Baker of being a party to the effort to discredit Mr. Borglum in his capacity as an investigator for President Wilson into the aircraft production situation. He intimates that part of this effort was the action of Senator Thomas on Friday in presenting to the Senate documents intended to show that Mr. Borglum endeavored to capitalize for personal gain the letter of the President authorizing Mr. Borglum to make inquiries in official quarters as to the condition of the aircraft program.

Various persons of official position are accused by Mr. Borglum in his letter to President Wilson of having lied to the President. The sculptor-investigator includes Secretary Baker among those who, he says, have deceived the public and the President as to the condition of the aircraft program. He wants an open investigation by the Senate Committee on Military Afairs, which has undertaken a new inquiry into the aircraft situation.

"My dear Mr. President:—

"On Tuesday or Wednesday I shall place before the Senate of the United States, through Senator Brandegee of my State, detailed evidence, together with affidavits attached, and relating to the falsehoods and deliberate 'frame-up' by a confessed tool of Colonel Deeds, and this man's engineer, and which by the following statement from the head of the War Department Intelligence Bureau appears as one of the mysteries in the case:

"Colonel Ralph H. Van Deman, head of the Intelligence Section, General Staff, declined to discuss in any way the activities of his office in connection with the inquiry. One of the mysteries of the Borglum case so far is the receipt of the report of Henry Harrison Suplee, a consulting engineer of the Dodge Company, which was labelled in the Congressional Record 'Memorandum for the confidential information of Military Intelligence Section, United States Army.' It became known yesterday that the Intelligence Section has not seen the report, does not know to whom it had been sent, and declined to enter upon an investigation of Mr. Borglum's activities on the ground that he was a personal representative of the President.

"It is a matter of the gravest concern to me that credence could be given to charges of such a nature, or that they could have been in your possession, and I have received no intimation of the falsehood until Mr. Marshall intimated that there was some sort of a charge, or charges, of disloyalty to you. This is so unthinkable that I dismissed and declined to even discuss them. The publicity of your letters to me through wide and artfully arranged and widely advertised charges against me, presented by Senator Thomas, together with the deliberate interferences by departmental aid you placed at my service, namely, Stanley Kirg and General Squier, Stanley King acting directly under the Secretary of War, together with other subordinates deputized to interfere with my investigation efforts, constitutes a very grievous chapter in America's effort to get production of airplanes.

"In this morning's press I have given the following denial, together with reference to the Secretary of War.

[Here Mr. Borglum quoted in full the statement he gave out Saturday, which was printed in THE TIMES of Sunday.]

"It is absurd to state that pro-Germans are clamoring for investigations, while the Secretary of War is a party to statements untrue and unfounded, issued to deceive the nation and serving no other possible purpose, except to warn Germany to hurry her own airplane production as 'we are just' and forever 'just at the peak of production.'

"Never, I believe, in the history of this country, has a group of men been given so completely a nation's resources, together with the Administration and the people's confidence, as have the aircraft group, and never have said confidences been more wantonly abused. I refer here to Major Gen. Squier, Howard E. Coffin, Colonel Deeds, and Colonel Montgomery. These civilian and military members appear everywhere in the program planned to meet our military needs—and they appear everywhere in the deliberate and elaborate machinery that placed and held the colossal contracts among a few—they appear everywhere in the fine network of falsehood and camouflage, and they included Mr. Baker as their partner in the common statements to the public—they deliberately lied to you and framed up their statements, particularly their failures, misleading charges before the Senate Military Committee, and they directly are responsible for no engines, no planes, no propellers, and our vanished appropriations.

"These men shaped the course of our production, selected the producers, created their agents, who have tangled up and delayed production, and they are responsible. It was this group who refused to consider the emergency and need of a nation at war, and calmly planned the creation of what every informed man knows was impossible to produce in time, the airplane motor. It was these men who refused the opportunities available to our Government to secure any of many of the tried airplane engines of Europe, and it was these same men who have held themselves aloof, uninformed as they are, from practical, experienced, aeronautical guidance, and in consequence we find ourselves, May 12, 1918, without a single American-made plane actually fighting for us with the Allies in Europe.

"Had there not been this malicious effort to discredit me with you and impugn my honor on the floor of the Senate I might have, with the rest of America, though with shame and anger, still been holding my peace, waiting and watching with the interminable shifting from one department to the other of responsibilities that can lie only at the door of the executive members of the Aircraft Board. The scurrilous slander by Deed's friend was a foul and an unfair blow, and the circumstances of its immortance and its purpose to invalidate me, discredit me, gave it abnormal public interest and unusual publicity.

"This, Mr. President, compels me to demand that the investigation by the Military Committee of the Senate shall be complete, exhaustive in the matters relating to aircraft production. But as these charges have been brought before the Senate, the interference by the War Department under Mr. Baker, preventing me from securing proper evidence, but lying and threatening witnesses by his assistant, Stanley King, together with Mix's charges, must be openly and publicly brought before Congress.

"I know that you will agree with me in this, that I have a right to demand it, as you know no harm can come to any one but those who are guilty, both for the delay, rather complete failure and the loss of our air program, the wasting of the funds appropriated, together with the persistent and malicious effort now to suppress an open investigation. I do not wish here to discuss the powerful and sinister forces which are gratified over every means that can be employed to produce disagreement among ourselves, and I therefore beg of you to believe that I shall do anything in my power to establish harmony and confidence among good Americans. You and I have disagreed on no single feature, and the angry and hostile attitude of those in charge of the aircraft program has been created and incited entirely by men whose interests and ideals are alien to this nation's immediate needs.

"I am loyal to you as our President, and, even better, I am loyal to your thought, as so often expressed, touching the state of the world and this nation's mission, and I shall remain so, but I am not loyal to, nor can I support, men or methods inimical to our country's good, planned to deceive you and the nation and discredit us in the eyes of the world.

"GUTZON BORGLUM."

HARRIS MAKES DENIAL.

Says He Was Not to be Borglum's Airplane Representative.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 12.—Benjamin Harris, who was mentioned in Kenyon W. Mix's statement as being the representative of Gutzon Borglum in the alleged proposal to form a company to manufacture airplanes, said today:

"The Mix statement and other statements that may give the impression I was to be Mr. Borglum's representative are all lies. It is true that I have met Mr. Mix and I desire to say now that after I had met the man and listened to his suggestions I warned Mr. Borglum to have nothing to do with him. I have known Mr. Borglum for a number of years. I have always found him to be a square and honest man. I know he is innocent of any wrongdoing in this matter."

The agitation centring about Mr. Borglum, showing that he appeared to be enjoying close relations with President Wilson, has been of more than passing interest in Stamford because of the fact that until recently he was known here as a warm personal friend of Colonel Roosevelt.

It was in politics that Mr. Borglum first met Mr. Harris, who is a general contractor and rated as wealthy.

SAILORS' QUICK WIT SAVED COMMANDER

Alcedo Men Stripped Him of Uniform and Fooled a U-Boat's Captain.

HE TELLS OF NAVY'S WORK

Commander Conn, in Grace M. E. Pulpit, Pleads for More Men to Fight Submarines.

"The American Navy, I mean that part of it now operating in European waters, has made good and the men who man those ships don't want to come home, and furthermore they don't expect to, until the job over there is finished in the proper way," said Commander William T. Conn, Jr., U. S. N., in an address he delivered in Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, Amsterdam Avenue and 160th Street, last night. Commander Conn was in charge of the naval patrol gunboat Alcedo when that vessel was torpedoed by a German submarine, the first American warship to be sunk by a U-boat.

The young naval officer, who is now in New York to take charge of the navy's great drive for thousands of new recruits, referred to the terrible hardships that the men of the allied torpedo fleets have to undergo—hardships, he added, that they stand with a smile and absolute confidence that in the end complete victory is to rest with their cause.

In introducing Commander Conn the Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, pastor of the church, told how the young naval commander went down with his ship and was rescued subsequently by his men, who with quick wit divested him speedily of his uniform. Within a few minutes after he was pulled onto a life raft the German submarine came alongside, and its Captain asked:

"Is the commanding officer on this raft?"

"No, Sir, he went down with the boat," a bluejacket answered, and the German believed him. That is why Commander Conn was able to appear in Grace Church pulpit last night.

"I would much rather take my turn at hunting German submarines," said Commander Conn, "than to make a speech before a big audience like this. You will recall that a few days ago Secretary Baker announced that we have more than 500,000 soldiers in France now, and those men went on transports convoyed by vessels of the United States Navy. So far the Navy has convoyed every transport safely to her destination and at last reports we had not lost a single soldier in doing so. The only transport carrying American troops which has been torpedoed was convoyed by vessels not of the United States Navy.

"When we first arrived in European waters and went on patrol duty we found the water for hundreds of square miles covered with the wreckage of ships which had fallen victims to the U-boats. The S O S calls came in so fast that we could not keep track of them. Now, however, the allied services have adopted a new system which is working very satisfactorily and which calls for the convoying of all ships. This convoying business is a very serious thing. Our American ships over there have fulfilled their part of the work in a fine way. No matter what the conditions, these destroyers have never failed once to meet the ships of the convoy at the appointed time and place.

"When one of our destroyers goes out it is for eight or nine or perhaps ten days. In all that time the members of the crew never take off their clothes until they come back to port. For days sometimes they work at top speed drenched to the skin. The only thing that discourages them is when the people at home write gloomy and pessimistic letters. Right here let me beg you if you have any boys in the navy, don't write them gloomy letters. It does not do you any good and it only worries them.

"Here is a little story that indicates the kind of men we have in the navy over there. I had a young lad in my crew, a yeoman, and one day I sent for him and told him that if we were torpedoed he was to save the muster roll so that after it was all over it would be possible to check up and find out who had been saved. Well, as you know, the Germans torpedoed the Alcedo at 2 o'clock one morning, and in four minutes the Alcedo disappeared forever. Hours afterward, while we were waiting to be picked up, I saw my yeoman and I said:

"'Son, where's my muster roll?'

"Here it is," he replied as he reached inside his shirt and pulled it out.

And that same boy, in the terrible minutes that followed the loss of our ship, found a broken lifebuoy. He was holding on to it when he saw one of our hospital stewards who was about to give in. He struggled to the side of the steward and with one hand held him above water, while with the other he clung to the buoy. He held on until both were saved.

"Now we are going to make a big drive for thousands of men. We must have them. New boats are coming out every day—transports, destroyers, chasers, and all sorts of boats—and the navy must man them. We are going to be called upon—and we are going to do it, of course—to convoy thousands and thousands of soldiers to Europe. We shall have to patrol hundreds of miles of submarine-infested seas, and on the navy will depend the safety of our soldiers.

"Submarines are hard to find. It's like looking for a pinhead somewhere between here in 110th Street and the Battery. I am often asked how many submarines have been destroyed. No one knows, for when a depth charge gets a U-boat the boat goes down, never to rise again. The British policy, and I think it a good one, is never to publish the fate of a submarine. By not doing so a very good effect, from the standpoint of the Allies, is exercised on the morale of the enemy crews.

"The people must realize that we need men, lots and lots of them. The navy is a fine service, and your comrades will be fine lads. In the army when you are in the trenches you spend half your time fighting rats and the other half killing Germans. In the navy you devote all your time to the work of killing Germans provided you can find them."

Our Women Gas Appliance Inspectors

make 80,000 calls a year upon housewives.

This gratuitous attention, making for the comfort of our customers, contributes in no small measure in maintaining our reputation for furnishing not only a good "service" but a better "service" than is to be found elsewhere. ¶ Each of the twenty-odd Inspectors starts out on her rounds in the morning with a list of Homes to be visited where the cooking appliances are to be inspected. On the list may be one or two addresses of housewives who have asked for the Inspector's help.

It is frequently found that housewives are unacquainted with the operation of the "air-mixer" on the range and that a yellow instead of a blue flame predominates. This the Inspector speedily corrects. The Woman Gas Appliance Inspector also adjusts the top burners of a range when necessary, and corrects other cooking troubles that have perplexed the housewife. ¶ Housewives and their maids are told by the Inspectors how the Gas Range can be cleaned and kept clean with little trouble. The Inspector also gives advice that results in better cooking and a more economical use of the gas.

GIANTS' TRIUMPHAL TOUR THROUGH WEST IS MARRED BY HEAVY FROST AT OUTSET

GIANTS ARE JOLTED BY WESTERN HOSTS

McGraw's Men Given No Such Reception at Pittsburgh as Home Fans Hoped For.

NO RUNAWAY FOR NEW YORK

Stubborn Resistance Promised In Pennant Chase by Pirates, Cubs, and the Reds.

The Giants started West expecting to have a picnic with Pittsburgh and ran smash up against a snag. Two defeats, one a shutout by the Pirates, is a sad reminder of the weakness of the Phillies, Dodgers, and Boston Braves at this end of the National League circuit. The New York team feasted uninterrupted on these three clubs, but as soon as they met real opposition McGraw's men found out that they were not going to have the easy time which had generally been predicted for them.

The shock which the Giants received at Smoketown gives McGraw's club forceful evidence of what to expect during the Western trip. It must be admitted that the clubs in that section of the universe are not as slow as the East has judged them. The arguments which New York will have to meet in Cincinnati and Chicago are sure to be just as stubborn as in Pittsburgh, and it now looks that the New York club should be satisified if it breaks even on the trip. St. Louis seems to be about in the same class as the other Eastern clubs, but the Mound City looks like the only spot where the Giants can expect to have the snap they had on the Atlantic seaboard.

What happened to the Giants in Pittsburgh should have a good effect on McGraw's players. Their string of eighteen victories with only one defeat in the East sent them away from here arrogant and overconfident. They were imbued with the idea that they could start a pitcher-wrecking matinée any time late in the game and still win. When they went up against pitching such as Hamilton and Cooper showed them, it was another story, and it should impress the fact upon McGraw's aggressive batting outfit that it will not pay to count their chickens too early.

The strength of the Western clubs has been underestimated. Pittsburgh has already shown that it has a club which is stronger than last season, and, taking the Pirates' showing against the other Western clubs as a comparison, the Giants are going to have plenty of opposition which will require their strongest efforts to meet successfully.

This stage of the season finds McGraw's club with a remarkable showing in the averages. There are no less than six of the New York players batting above .300, and there are still four undefeated pitchers. Benton and Sallee, two of McGraw's most reliable southpaws, fell by the wayside in Pittsburgh.

Verdie Schupp is still a strong card which McGraw has not played yet. McGraw is waiting until the Louisville flinger is in the best of shape, and he will not use him while there is any evidence of a sore arm. The Giants are fortunate in having so much capable pitching talent that the club can take a commanding lead without the services of their best boxman.

New York's experience in Pittsburgh also dispels the fear which came from other cities that the great superiority of the Giants would make the National League race so one-sided as to kill off much of the interest. There is more real inisrest in the Giants, right now after those two defeats in Pittsbnrgh, than if McGraw's club had been running a nip and tuck race with the other clubs.

The ambition of the West is to beat the Giants. It is so much to the interest of each club that the Western opposition should be effective that all the other clubs will make the same desperate effort to stop McGraw's men that Pittsburgh has made.

There is more bitter rivalry against McGraw's team in the West when it is running far ahead than there would be if the race was close, and there will be a more determined effort to trip them up now that Pittsburgh has shown that it can be done.

Philadelphia has taken a big drop during the last week and is now in fifth place, while Chicago, Pittsburgh, and Cincinnati have moved up and now share the first division with the Giants. The three other Eastern clubs are safely tucked away in the second division with St. Louis for company.

The American League race already promises to be one of the closest in years, and New York fans find great satisfaction that Manager Miller Huggins already has the Yankees up fighting with the leaders. Cleveland displaced the Boston Red Sox in the lead of the Ban Johnson parade, and Boston and the Yanks are close on the heels of the Indians. There are only three and a half games difference between Cleveland in first place and the Athletics, running last.

All the clubs are so closely bunched and the games are being so closely contested that a great see-saw fight is pretty sure to be the result. One thing is very certain, and that is that the Chicago White Sox are not going to take the pennant without a harder fight than last season. Washington is a greatly improved team with the addition of Shotten and Lavan, and Griffith's club has got to be reckoned with by the best of the clubs.

Huggins has instilled the Yanks with the proper fighting spirit, and in their games last week they displayed a never-say-die persistency which will always win ball games. Each day sees the pitching staff becoming more settled, and the Yanks' hard-hitting array of batsmen are living up to the pace they set early in the season.

SPEARS IS TWICE VICTOR.

Wins Match Race and Five-Mile Event at Velodrome.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., May 12.—Bob Spears won two sensational cycling victories at the Velodrome this afternoon, by beating Arthur Spencer, the national champion, in two out of three heats of a one-mile match race and then coming back and winning the five-mile open from a field of forty starters. These performances stamp Spears as a rider who will have to be reckoned with when the national championship is decided.

Reggie McNamara won the half-mile handicap from the ten-yard mark, leading Willie Hanley, Francesco Verri, and Tom Hello home. The miss and out invitation went to Frank Corry, who just beat out Eddie Madden. Max Halpern of the Century Road Club Association, took the half-mile handicap for amateurs from the eighty-yard mark, while Gus Lang won the miss and out invitation for the amateurs.

BETHLEHEM ELEVEN LOSES.

West Hudsons Spring Surprise on Soccer Leaders in Game.

Totally unmindful of the nation-wide reputation of the soccer team representing the Bethlehem Steel Company, finalists in both of the United States Football Association and American Football Association cup ties, the West Hudsons of Newark yesterday won a sensational victory over the Pennsylvanians by 4 goals to 2 in the championship game of the National Football League at Clark's Athletic Field, East Newark. Bethlehem's defeat puts Paterson in line for the title, in case the silk weavers lose no games from now on.

OAK RIDGE COURSE EASY FOR KERRIGAN

The system of training used at the naval stations of the country evidently is conducive to good golf as well as to the physical fitness of the sailors. At any rate Tommy Kerrigan, former professional at Siwanoy, and now a seaman stationed at the Pelham Bay Training Station, helped to prove the theory a fact by demonstrating a brand of golf at the Oak Ridge Country Club yesterday which was superior to the best efforts of Jim Barnes, Western open champion; Walter C. Hagen, former national open champion, and Jack Dowling, professional at Scarsdale.

Kerrigan, who received a furlough for the day, to play in an exhibition Red Cross benefit match of eighteen holes, was paired with Hagen against Barnes and Dowling. He gave little evidence of what he had in store during the first nine holes, in which Barnes and Dowling had things much their own way and finished 3 up. It was on the homeward journey, however, that Kerrigan developed a streak of accurate approaching and deadly putting, which not only overhauled his opponents but was mainly responsible for giving Kerrigan and Hagen the match at 1 up.

Kerrigan had a 71 for the new Westchester County course, getting a 33 for the final nine holes, in which he had three birdies and the rest of the holes in par. Although new Oak Ridge furnished a strong test of golf the able performers all gave finished exhibitions and so enthused the large gallery that more than $500 was raised for the Red Cross.

Dowling had the best outward journey of the four with a 36, in which he equaled par on each of the nine holes. However, Dowling had his trouble coming in and finished with a 75 for the day, the highest score of the four players. Hagen had a 73, after coming home in 34, and Barnes made a 74, compared with Kerrigan's 71.

For the first five holes of the match there was little to choose between the two teams. Each hole was halved until the sixth was reached. At this 181-yard journey Barnes drove the green and sank a ten-foot putt for a birdie 2 to win the hole. Barnes was the only player who failed to get a par 5 at the seventh, and he missed a putt of only a few inches there. Hagen and Kerrigan were both in trouble at the eighth and ninth and lost the holes, which turned Dowling and Barnes 3 up.

Kerrigan began his sensational playing at the tenth, when he got a birdie 3 to win that hole. The next two were halved, but at the thirteenth Hagen sank a putt for a 3, which cut down his opponent's advantage to one hole. The match was halved at the fourteenth, when Kerrigan got his second birdie of the inward trip, and Kerrigan and Hagen went into the lead for the first time at the sixteenth, when Kerrigan again cut a stroke from par.

The rest of the holes were halved, although Barnes had a splendid chance to square the match at the seventeenth, when he was on the green in 2. He had a twenty-foot putt for a 3, but his effort rimmed the cup and the ball hung on the lip, refusing to drop in.

MRS. GAVIN AGAIN BEATEN.

Loses Handicap Golf Match to Marston by 3 and 2.

Mrs. William A. Gavin, the women's metropolitan champion, lost her second handicap golf match in her series of Red Cross exhibitions yesterday at the Hackensack Golf Club when she was defeated by Max Marston, former North and South amateur champion, by 3 up and 2 to play. Marston, who has played little golf during the last year, since he has been convalescing from a severe illness, gave a surprisingly clever exhibition of the game, especially for one so out of practice. He was out in 39 and came back in 38 for a well-earned 77 on the course.

Mrs. Gavin never seemed able to get going in her usually consistent game. She did begin the match with a sensational twenty-foot putt at the first hole, which gave her a half on that green, but thereafter she had every kind of trouble with her mashie shots. At the first hole Mrs. Gavin was over the green and in a trap on her fourth shot. She pitched out of the trap none too well, but made up for the poor shot by holing out the long putt.

The feminine leader did most of her bad playing on the first nine holes when she needed forty-nine strokes to reach the turn. Coming in she was much better and regained some of the lost ground. Facing defeat, she established the sensational shot of the match at the short seventeenth when her tee shot dropped within eight feet of the cup. She finished off this brilliant effort by holing out for a birdie 2.

Marston had only one birdie during the match, this coming at the twelfth, where his second shot landed dead and he holed out for a 3. Threatening weather and a flurry of rain at noon kept down the crowd somewhat, but at that $250 was realized for the Red Cross.

Mrs. Gavin received a stroke at the first, fourth, sixth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, fifteenth, and sixteenth holes. The actual cards of the players follow:

TOP WEIGHT FOR ROAMER.

Andrew Miller's Campaigner Has Honor Place for Paumonok.

Andrew Miller's old campaigner, Roamer, has the honor of top weight in the allotments issued by Handicapper Walter S. Vosburgh, for the Paumonok Handicap, which will be the feature of the opening of the racing season at Jamaica next Thursday. The son of Knight Errant is asked to shoulder 133 pounds over the short distance of six furlongs, and will have to concede four pounds to the brilliant Wooly Head, which is bracketed with Stromboli, an unlikely starter at 129 pounds.

One of the remarkable features of the weight scale is the lowly position accorded R. T. Wilson, Jr.'s Campfire, a champion as a two-year-old and winner of the Toboggan Handicap as a three-year-old. He is in with 123 pounds and has five horses below him on the list.

In the three-year-old division Mr. Vosburgh has the highest estimate of the abilities of George W. Loft's Papp and W. E. Applegate's Jack Hare, Jr. They are asked to carry 115 pounds, which is four pounds more than is allotted to Lucullite, the three-year-old crack of the Belmont Stable. There are sixty-two eligibles for the Paumonok, which has a value of $5,000. The weights follow:

Roamer, 133 pounds; Westy Hogan, 129; Stromboli, 129; Leochares, 126; Ten Point, 125; Campfire, 123; He Will, 121; Hank O'Day, 120; High Noon, 120; Tom McTaggert, 117; Corn Tassel, 117; Kathleen, 115; Kalitan, 115; Papp, 115; Jack Hare, Jr., 115; Pickwick, 114; Sunflash 2d, 113; Lucullite, 111; Tea Caddy, 111; Bonnie Dance, 110; Startling, 110; Old Koenig, 110; Diamond Rock, 110; Star Master, 109; Tumblar, 108; Manister Tol, 108; Irma Frank, 107; Naturalist, 107; Wigstone, 107; Beale O'Grady, 107; High Cost, 106; Old Maid, 105; Mr. Ned, 105; Bellringer, 105; Flags, 105; Bully Boy, 104; Phillipic, 104; Royal Ensign, 104; Columbine, 104; Top Coat, 103; Enfilade, 103; Arrah Go On, 102; Etruscan, 102; Ed. YOUNG TENNIS STAR BEATS OLDER RIVAL

National Boys' Champion Puts Out Favorite in Harlem Open Tourney.

Insurmountable difficulties beset the path of several of the favorites in the continuation of the annual invitation tournament of the Harlem Tennis Club yesterday. Probably the most unexpected was the defeat of H. H. Manchester, the winner of the event a year ago by the national boys' champion, Vincent Richards. This contest furnished some of the most spectacular play of the day, Richards winning by 5—7, 6—1, 7—5, and thereby advancing to the round before the semi-finals.

Two other players, J. S. O'Boyle and William T. Tilden 2d of Philadelphia, attained equally advanced positions. In the case of O'Boyle the advance came in the nature of a surprise, for he defeated one of the most formidable of the younger players hereabouts, Benjamin Letson, by the rather one-sided score of 6—2, 6—1.

The contest between Richards and Manchester was a brilliant one. During the first set Manchester managed to get the whip hand, but Richards was undaunted and carried off the second set with whirlwind play. When the third set started Manchester endeavored to make it a quick victory to his credit. When he ran off four games in a row, the match appeared to be almost over, but Richards rallied and his determined stand enabled him to draw up on his rival. Manchester was still leading at 5—3 and in the ninth game was once within a point of match. The winning count, however, proved elusive and Richards finally turned the game to his credit. From then on he played brilliantly and was rewarded with victory at 7—5 in the decisive set.

The match between Letson and O'Boyle had been looked forward to with keen anticipation, but it hardly lived up to expectations. Letson showed the effects of lack of practice, while O'Boyle, on the other hand, was going along at top speed. The former Georgetown player, who is now at the Pelham Bay training station, showed that he possessed a service that would try the skill of many a stronger player than Letson. It was a high-bounding twist, and Letson was always in difficulties in attempting to handle it.

Letson's game is usually of the net variety, but he found it unavailing against O'Boyle, who possessed a powerful game at the barrier himself. The latter seemed to be a bit quicker in picking his openings for an advance to the net, and, once ensconced in that position, he cut off Letson's drives with sharp volleying that left the New York boy hopelessly out of the contest.

It was hoped that Ward Dawson, the California player, would make his entrance into the tournament yesterday, but after holding the match open for some time the Coast star was defaulted. Dawson is at Pelham Bay training for an Ensign's commission, and as his examinations come within a few days he found it insdvisable to compete in the tournament. The withdrawal of Dawson leaves Tilden and O'Boyle as the two most likely to fight it out in the final round.

It was announced yesterday that the doubles competition would begin on Wednesday.

The summaries:

First Round.—W. J. Kirk defeated C. Isaacs, 6—3, 5—7, 6—4; Cecil Donaldson defeated J. Levis, 6—4, 6—4; L. L. Cook defeated G. Hardie, 6—3, 6—4; W. Collom defeated L. Bry, 6—4, 6—2; H. Galbraith won from Dr. Chapman, by default; Paul Martin defeated A. S. Harkavy, 4—6, 7—5, 6—7.

Brady Defeats Younger Rivals In Pastime A. C. Meet.

H. J. Brady, a fifty-two-year-old pedestrian of the Pastime A. C., gave a field of younger walkers a surprise yesterday in the handicap members' games of the organization at Macomb's Dam Park by capturing the prize in the two-mile handicap walk. Brady, starting with a handicap of 3 minutes 15 seconds, kept well ahead of his field for the greater part of the distance, and won by about a yard from B. Allen, who had an allowance of 2:45.

W. J. Campion had a successful day, winning two of the six events and finishing third in another.

NEWPORT DEFEATS PELHAM.

Local Naval Reserve Nine Suffers First Setback.

The baseball team of Pelham Bay Naval Training Station suffered its first defeat in eight games yesterday when it was forced to bow to the Newport Naval Reserve nine in an interesting game at Pelham Bay, by the score of 3 to 1. The Newport team, composed mostly of former college stars, bunched four hits in the eighth inning, turning three of them into runs, which gave them the game. The Pelham Bay sailors' lone tally came in the fifth session, when Dick Hennesay, singled, stole second, and tallied on a sizzling single by Saunnier, the Pelham Bay twirler.

The score:

Newport	0 0 0 0 0 0 3 0 x	3	4	1

Batteries—Lindstrom and Murphy; Saunnier and Sanberg.

RUNAWAY ENLIVENS SPEEDWAY MATINEE

A. Bruno's Bay Gelding Bolts with Driver and Loses Chance in a Match Race.

Patrons of the Harlem River Speedway harness matinée were treated to a runaway yesterday in the second Spring meeting of the Road Drivers' Association when A. Bruno's bay gelding Bruno became unmanageable in its 1:09 trot against E. Carpenter's bay mare Catherine P. The animal bolted the full length of the Speedway before finally being brought under control. No damage was done by the runaway other than to cause an abandonment of the event. The accident came after two heats had been trotted, Catherine P. gaining the first and Bruno the second.

Four events were decided in straight heats, and in all but one only two horses started. The exception was the 1:07 trot, which went to four heats before Wood Olcott, a brown horse driven by A. R. Issaeff, was finally awarded the ribbon. Wood Olcott finished second in the first heat, won the second, was second in the third, and won the fourth.

GOODMAN LEADER IN MEET.

Wins One Event and Runs Second Twice at Games.

Interesting performances were furnished yesterday in the five events which made up the program at the track meet of the Eslem-Crescent A. C., held at Macomb's Dam Park. A. Goodman accounted for one victory and second place in two other events. He won the 200-yard handicap run, was beaten by about one foot in the 100-yard dash, and finished second in the running high jump. In the latter event Goodman was credited with an effort of 5 feet 4 inches, equal to the mark of the winner, B. Lauder, but, because Lauder was scratch man, he received first prize.

While at a restaurant the other day a man we met, on hearing we were from Rogers Peet, took delight in showing us a cutaway which after *twenty years of social activity, including five trips to Ireland, was still on the job and going strong.

Hadn't faded a bit and the cloth, buttons, even the original lining, were still in fair condition.

What a backing for that old chorus we sing about the futility of buying two cheap suits, when one good one will long outwear those two.

*Some of our principals think we're imposing too much on the public's credulity (asking them to swallow "twenty years"), still, as long as it's so, why not tell it?

The "finest of the fine" are included among our Panamas.

INVOKE NEW LAW TO AID RED CROSS DRIVE

Will Ask Direct Subscriptions from Corporations in New $100,000,000 Campaign.

INDUSTRIES ARE CLASSIFIED

Sub-Committees Will Appeal to Employers to Stand Behind Their Men at the Front.

The Committee on Corporation Campaign of the Red Cross, of which Colonel William Boyce Thompson is Chairman and George Whitney Vice Chairman, has taken offices in the Metropolitan Tower and laid out plans to make large collections from corporations toward New York's share of the $100,000,000 minimum Red Cross Fund to be raised in the week beginning May 20.

All corporations in this city will be called upon to subscribe directly to the Red Cross Fund under the new State law which makes it possible to substitute this plan for the method which proved disappointing at the last campaign, of having corporations declare special dividends with the request that the stockholders turn them over to the Red Cross.

Classify Corporations.

The corporations have been classified according to industries and subcommittees appointed to collect funds from each industry. The subcommittees and their Chairmen are as follows:

Food Products—Edwin Sayre.
Retail Merchants—Michael Friedsam and Sol G Rosenbaum.
Wholesale Merchants—J. P. Stevens.
Interior Furnishings—George McNair.
Jewelry—Harry Larter.
Automobiles—E. R. Tinker.
Hides and Leather—Louis J. Robertson.
Boots and Shoes—Frank S. Flagg.
Petroleum, Oils, Asphalt, and Gas—Walter Jennings.
Mining and Metals—Charles Hayden.
Steel—E. A. S. Clarke.
Exporting and Importing—Joseph P. Grace.
Banking—George F. Baker, Jr.
Insurance—Charles D. Norton.
Cotton Brokers—Edward M. Weld.
Stock Exchange—Donald G. Geddes.

The paper and printing industries, electrical industries, telephone and telegraph, and coal and coke industries are yet to be assigned to Chairmen.

Colonel Thompson said yesterday:

"We shall get along very well once we have made it clear to the corporations that it is the right and duty of every corporation to the stockholders to subscribe for the protection of the property in aiding to win the war, and its duty also to the employes who have gone to the front, leaving their all behind.

"I think we should look at it in this way: Every large employer has an asset in each man who goes to the front. When he returns to his post in most cases he will be a much better man all around. His ideas will have been broadened, his character will have been stiffened, his physique greatly strengthened and he will be grounded as nothing else could ground him in what this country means to its sons.

Deems Veteran a Better Man.

"Our young men who went to the civil war—our fathers and grandfathers—did not have the care that our boys over there are going to have. We have progressed greatly in the last fifty-odd years, but when those lads came back home after Appomattox it was soon realized that they had been making real men at the front in those trying years in the 'sixties.' A new and virile element was emptied into the business world, and experiences of active service gave us a new race of intelligent, self-reliant men. History will repeat itself. Better men are coming back when the war is over, if they survive the battle shock and wounds and disease.

"It should not be necessary to talk very long to a head of a corporation in these days of expanding vision and advanced ideas to convince those in charge of its affairs that the interest of its stockholders will be greatly strengthened by following its men right to their family circles, to the training camps, and to the trenches with relief in every way, so that they will come back convinced that their employers have stood by them, and that everything that was possible was done for their care. All this makes for good public service, and it makes for good citizenship. It makes a great deal of difference when a men in fighting for his country to know that the man he has been working for is fighting for him."

The legality of direct contributions from corporations is discussed in this statement from the committee:

"In the first place, the President, as said in his proclamation, referring to the Red Cross: 'It is recognized by law and international conventions as a public instrumentality for war relief.'

"In the second place, the Legislatures of New York and New Jersey have each passed a law recognizing the right of a corporation to make subscriptions for instrumentalities for the carrying on of the war, which means the Red Cross, as such, and have written into the law the inherent duty of the corporation to subscribe for its own protection.

"In the third place, eminent lawyers have been consulted, so as to leave directors absolutely free in their minds as to their legal right to make these contributions without encountering the slightest danger from an action by any dissatisfied stockholders. These opinions will be laid before the corporations before the drive begins."

Women to Aid Campaign.

A great many women are now being mustered into the army which will undertake to raise the $25,000,000 that forms the quota that is to come from Greater New York. These women are being assigned to parts of the city where they can render the most effective service. "Every woman to her own sector" is the principle upon which the directors of the drive, at the Clearing House for War Work Volunteers, at 4 East Thirty-ninth Street, are distributing the workers in the campaign.

By this method every woman who will solicit contributions for the war fund will be assigned to duty in the part of the city with which she is most familiar and where personal acquaintance is likely to have the most telling effect. Women who have households to look after and are limited as to the time they can give for the work will be assigned to their home districts, where they can be of the most service without neglecting their personal responsibilities. The Assembly District boundaries have been taken as the basis of the organization and there will be a Red Cross leader for each district. Women who want to enlist for the period of the Red Cross drive may do so by getting in touch with Miss Bernays at headquarters.

Already the following organizations have signified their willingness to furnish teams for the house-to-house canvass:

The Woman's Suffrage Party of Queens, Miss Nellie Smith, Captain.
Philomon Society of Staten Island, Miss Bessie C. Hodge, Captain.
Hudson Guild, Mrs. Alexander Bing, two teams.
Harlem Council of Women, Mrs. F. A. Halsey, Captain.
Women's Municipal League of the City of New York, Mrs. Laurent Oppenheim, two teams.
Y. W. C. A., Miss Blanche Merrell, several teams.
Pen and Brush Club, Miss Drett, two teams.

RED CROSS WAR WORK A RECORD IN APRIL

Hospital and Rest System in France Enlarged and Brought to the Highest Efficiency.

PARIS, May 11.—The work accomplished by the American Red Cross in April surpassed all records of the organization since it took up its activities in France. Food and drink were supplied to American soldiers on the way from ports of entry in France to the various camps. Nine rest stations on the American lines of communication and seven canteens on the French lines provided 408,000 meals. Nine metropolitan canteens served 454,000 meals.

A complete new hospital with 200 beds was established in a château immediately behind the front. A hospital of 500 beds is being erected at a famous race track near Paris. Three more dispensaries have been opened at ports. Eighty beds have been added to an American hospital in Paris, 75 at Neuilly, and 100 at Military Hospital No. 1, besides 100 at Military Hospital No. 2 and 60 at Military Hospital No. 3.

Convalescent homes have been opened at Cannes and Biarritz. Nineteen artificial arms and 169 artificial legs were distributed gratis. Much assistance was given to a large number of French hospitals, with special attention for those containing American wounded. These hospitals received 543 boxes, containing 2,500 surgical instruments, 1,000 mattresses, 4,500 pillows, 4,592 sheets, 1,200 sweaters, 325 beds, 10,538 suits of underwear, 1,456 blankets, and 1,200 shirts.

For Americans at the front there was completed a shower-bath establishment, with equipment for removing vermin, which was put into operation in six days. It has a capacity of 25,000 men weekly. Two laundries were installed at aviation camps, of sufficient size to wash the clothes of 1,000 men weekly. Six field kitchens furnished food to soldiers going to and returning from the battlefield. Each has a capacity of 5,000 men daily.

The Red Cross in the month distributed 691,000 bags of tobacco and packages of cigarettes. It operated fourteen farms at American hospital centres.

In the field service section fourteen traveling canteens supplied 425,000 hot drinks. Six canteens in the advanced zone of the French army furnished food, drinks, and supplies of all kinds free for 450,000 American, French, and British soldiers. At one of these canteens, situated a short distance behind the lines, American soldiers gather nightly to smoke, play games, write letters, and read books, magazines, and American and English newspapers.

The hospital huts contain clubrooms for the nurses, the enlisted personnel, and convalescents. They were built by the Red Cross, but have been operated by the Young Men's Christian Association. Under an arrangement just concluded, the Y. M. C. A. withdraws from all hospitals, the Red Cross assuming all responsibility for activities of whatever nature there.

DU PONT AID FOR RED CROSS

Dividend of 2 Per Cent. Declared to Help the Coming Campaign.

WILMINGTON, Del., May 12.—A Red Cross dividend amounting to $1,177,084 has been declared by E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., on its common stock to aid the Red Cross drive, which begins on May 20. It is payable on May 18 to stockholders of record May 8. This dividend is for 2 per cent., the largest amount yet set aside by any corporation to help America win the war against Germany.

The du Pont Company was among the first last year to adopt this idea of corporation dividends for Red Cross purposes and officials of this company got credit for originating the plan. At that time dividends of only 1 per cent. were declared, but the du Pont Directors believe that there is no work for humanity more important than the work the Red Cross is doing in this world-war. The question of increasing the dividend received serious consideration as soon as plans for the coming campaign began to mature. It is expected that virtually all of the dividend checks will be turned into the Red Cross fund by their recipients.

The distribution is to be made early this year so that every one will have the funds in hand at the beginning of the campaign, thus avoiding some of the complications caused last year by the receipt of checks after the regular contributions had been made.

'BIFF! BANG!' A NAVY COMEDY

Actors Who Are Now in War Service to Give a Benefit.

Rehearsals will be held every day this week for "Biff! Bang!" the musical comedy which the naval recruits of Pelham Bay station will present at the Century Theatre for a week's engagement. About 100 recruits, many of them not unknown to Broadway, will be seen in the piece, and of this number just half will don skirts. The music has been written by Chief Bandmaster William Schroeder, and the book and lyrics are by Joseph Fields, son of Lew Fields; William Israel, Robert Cohen, Frank Mills, Philip Dunning, and Jack Meagher. Yeoman Dunning, formerly a Shubert stage manager, is staging the piece.

No less a person than Jack Pickford, who recently joined the navy, will be in the cast, and another will be Robert Mantell, Jr. Still others will be Hugh Dillman, Georgie Lane, Willis Clare, Henry Levey, George Wulfing, David Quixano, Arthur Lydecker, Sam Baumel, William Kipp, Jimmie Kipp, Robert Fischer, George Robinson, and Harry Davis, Jr. The Pelham Bay band and the camp's symphony orchestra will also contribute to the entertainment.

The Century stage and the Hippodrome will be used this week for ensemble rehearsals. Six night performances and four matinées will be given at the Century, the engagement beginning with a matinée Memorial Day, May 30.

MOVIE MOONSHINERS RIDE IN LIMOUSINES

Roscoe Arbuckle Raids a Mountain Still in Up-to-Date Fashion.

BAD MEN "BITE THE DUST"

Impossible Characters in "Toys of Fate"—Mme. Petrova in "The Life Mask."

Ragtime that pretends to be nothing but ragtime and succeeds in being first-class ragtime is superior, in the opinion of many, to grand opera that pretends to be the highest musical accomplishment and falls markedly short of its goal, and, in the same way, moving picture farce, though of the most broad and burlesque variety, may be superior to more assuming drama. Those who agree with this point of view will prefer Roscoe Arbuckle's absurd comedy, "Moonshine," which had its first showing at the Rialto yesterday, to Mme. Petrova in "The Life Mask," at the same theatre; Mme. Nazimova in "Toys of Fate" at the Strand, and—except for his faithful followers—to William S. Hart in "Selfish Yates" at the Rivoli.

"Moonshine" is a roughhouse farce, much better than slapstick comedy, and it is that from its first picture to the last. Its frankness about itself is part of its amusement. A caption thrown on the screen at the beginning announces that the scene is laid in "The Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia—made in California," where, as everybody knows, Mr. Arbuckle usually works. From this announcement the action goes on with a hop, skip, and jump, introducing first "Jud Owens, a typical movie moonshiner," whose immediate concern, of course, is a desperate feud. The feud comes to a quick conclusion, however, when Jud shoots his sole remaining enemy and remarks, "There, that's the last of the Gillettes—we can now live in safety."

The moonshiners, all fearfully and wonderfully "typical," have an underground still that, for size and completeness of equipment, would make the average "civilized" distillery look like a small-town hard cider plant, and to this comes "Fatty" Arbuckle, riding in a limousine and wearing a monocle, in the guise of a revenue officer. He brings a squad of deputies with him, a hundred or more, all of whom pour out of the limousine behind him looking as if they had just had a comfortable ride. The fool-play goes on, getting more and more foolish, until "Fatty" bends the barrel of his rifle so that he can shoot the last of the moonshiners around a corner, and only occasionally does the ridiculousness fall flat. "Moonshine" was made to make spectators laugh, and it certainly succeeded yesterday.

Nazimova in "Toys of Fate."

Mme. Nazimova in "Toys of Fate," at the Strand leaves little, if anything, to be desired in the matter of acting, and all of those in her support are exceptionally good; but the play is not the thing it should be. It misses as a serious drama because of its impossibilities of character and coincidence, and it fails to be a good melodrama because in so many places it tries to be a serious drama. The story is about a gypsy girl whose mother committed suicide after a wealthy roué had lured her from the gypsies and then deserted her. The daughter, twenty years later, meets the same man, who again puts his powers of lurement to work with the same success.

Many complications of plot develop; there is a villain, a hero, a number of other made-to-order characters, and, finally, a most artificial happy ending. Many persons will wonder why Nazimova, who chose to play Ibsen's masterpieces at the Plymouth Theatre this season, selected such a play as "Toys of Fate" for the screen. Can it be that she hasn't much respect for the movies?

Mme. Petrova's play at the Rialto is lacking in the same general way as Nazimova's. It simply does not convince one that it is either first class melodrama or serious drama. Mme. Petrova is undoubtedly capable of good screen acting, and she succeeds to a degree in her latest vehicle, but the vehicle does not carry her very far. It is described as a mystery play, and the plot seeks to create suspense by throwing suspicion of murder upon the heroine, but, although the spectators do not know in advance who will be arbitrarily selected as the murderer, they know that it will not be the heroine.

Hart in More Gun Play.

William S. Hart, at the Rivoli, is in a familiar rôle, that of the wicked man who reforms, and his new play has plenty of gun play and other action to delight the regular Hartfans. There is no doubt that Hart can do well the part he almost invariably plays, but one would think that artistic ambition, if nothing else, would prompt him to try something different.

The Rialto Orchestra ambitiously played Paul Dukas's "The Apprentice of the Sorcerer" as its overture at yesterday's opening and thereby added to its remarkable achievements. The dramatic exposition of the piece by Regan Hughston was effective and added to the success of the orchestra by putting the audience into a mood and mind for intelligent comprehension of the unusual music.

Other numbers on the Rialto musical program this week are an aria from Verdi's "The Masked Ball," sung by Annie Rosner, and Bruno Huhn's "Invictus," sung by Emmanuel List.

The third installment of the Outing-Chester pictures, "A Mountaineering Memory," at the Strand, upholds the high standard of the first two installments, having an entertainment and educational value for any one whose interest in things is not confined to three meals a day and the latest fictitious exploits of screen and stage impossibles.

The musical program at the Strand includes Irene Audrey singing "The Star" and "When You're Away," Henry Miller singing "God Be With the Boys Tonight" and "The Rosary," Ralph H. Brigham and Herbert Sisson alternating at the organ, and the Symphony Orchestra playing Suppe's "Light Cavalry Overture," Oscar Spirescu and Carl Edouarde conducting.

"Jeanne d'Arc Speaks," a musical fantasy interpretive of the spirit of the American soldiers in France, is the most impressive number of the Rivoli's musical program this week. Its lead was to have been sung by Miss Jeanne Gordon, but owing to injuries suffered in an automobile accident on Friday night Miss Gordon was unable to appear, and her place was filled by Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy, whose success throughout the week was promised by her singing yesterday. She was assisted by the Rialto Male Quartet and a special and especially good scenic setting made by John Wenger. The orchestra, conducted by Hugo Riesenfeld and Erno Rapee, plays Liszt's "First Hungarian Rhapsody," and the quartet sings "The Musical Trust," composed by Henry Hadley.

At the Broadway Theatre, where "The Bride's Awakening" with Mae Murray and the Fadettes' Orchestra continue this week, Wednesday will be W. S. S. day. Only thrift and war savings stamps will be accepted in payment for tickets and given in change.

HISTORY OF AN EVIL LIFE.

The Liberal Frankfurter Zeitung, though admitting that the treaty with Rumania is not in keeping with that resolution, greets it with satisfaction. —GEORGE RENWICK's dispatch in yesterday's TIMES.

The resolution Mr. RENWICK refers to is the Reichstag resolution solemnly disclaiming any intention to make annexations. That resolution is as dead as JULIUS CAESAR now, and it never was alive in Germany; yet what a life it had outside of Germany! A pernicious life; it throve lustily among pacifists and dullards in the United States, England, France, Russia, and Italy; it had the growth of JONAH's gourd among the traitors and seditionaries in those countries. Everywhere it was pointed to as proof that we needed only to stop this wicked fighting and get comfortably around a table with Germany, and all misunderstandings would be smoothed away. For awhile it was uphill work for common sense to get her word in, to make men hear that the resolution meant nothing, that Germany could not be negotiated with until she had been beaten.

Life! It had a lusty life, outside of Germany. It lived stalwartly in Russia. It was on July 19 that the Reichstag adopted that resolution, and it was on July 23 that the All-Russian Soviet, then under KERENSKY's control, issued to its armies the proclamation beginning:

> Fellow-Soldiers: One of our armies has wavered, its regiments have fled before the enemy. Part of our front has been broken. Emperor WILLIAM's hordes, which have moved forward, are bringing with them death and destruction.

It had a great life, for a time, in Italy. The glad news that the Reichstag had pledged Germany to make no annexations, that the Kaiser had accepted the resolution through Chancellor MICHAELIS, went through the Italian army in the Alps like quicksilver. The pacifist and the Socialist went along with it, saying everywhere, "Why go on fighting? The "Germans don't want to fight any "more than you do. Lay down your "arms, the Germans will do the same, "and then there will be an honorable "peace, with no annexations on either "side." On Oct. 24, in the Alps, the resolution of July 19 completed its fatal work, and, in the form of a German army, swept like a whirlwind through the Italian soldiers and down into the plains of Italy, carrying with it the usual atrocities, the usual slavery of the old men, women, and children it encountered in its path.

It had a brave life in England, France, and the United States; no lie ever had a braver. But in these countries there was always a steady majority which kept its head. The lie of July 19 was not yet done with its work in Russia; even after the fall of Riga the deluded Soviets went on trusting to it, believing that they had the clue to what was going on in the minds of the German people, that all they had to do was to lay down their arms, and then, if the German militarists should give the order to fire on them, the German people would rise and enforce its declaration of July 19. So they gave the supreme proof of their trust by disbanding the Russian Army; and German troops have been cutting Russia's arteries ever since, to the accompaniment of joyful applause from all Germany.

And now the resolution, which never had a life in Germany, but had such a glorious life elsewhere while it lasted, is as dead everywhere as in Germany. Ukraine and Rumania slew it; there is none so dense as to give it the pretense of belief. "Democratic journals like the Tageblatt," says Mr. RENWICK, "register their approval of this use of force." In Rumania. No one objects, in Germany. As for Ukraine, there are uneasy voices in Berlin, but only on the ground of expediency; it is, perhaps, unsafe to goad the Ukrainians too far into madness.

Why was it so sure, from the first, that the resolution of July 19 had no real life in Germany, could only have a life outside? Because, even if the Reichstag meant it, the Reichstag's declaration was worthless. Civilians have ceased to have any part in the decision of Germany's policies, except what the Generals let them have. The decisions of civilians, of lawmakers, of statesmen, mean nothing unless they please the soldiers and are approved by them. Constitutional government is becoming only a form in Germany; the absolute despotism of the Middle Ages is returning there, and it makes no difference what Reichstags may resolve or say or do. It may "resolute till the cows come home," and still its resolutions will mean nothing unless the Vehmegericht of Potsdam stamps them "O. K." "When an agreement on anything is reached between those two factors," (the nominal Government and the Generals,) "it is only achieved by the Government giving way." So said NOSKE, Socialist Deputy, in the Main Committee of the Reichstag last Wednesday; and he added: "There is "no getting away from the impres"sion that Germany is again under "absolute rule." Let us pay the Reichstag the compliment of agreeing, for argument's sake, that the resolution of July 19 was not an intentional fraud, that the Reichstag really meant it at the time, and then comes the inevitable question: What difference does that make? What has the Reichstag got to do with it?

AT THE PRIMROSE LEAGUE.

Leveler, demagogue, red radical, revolutionist, confiscator, despoiler of Dukes, throttler of the House of Lords, destroyer of all that was venerable and conservative in old England—what word was too rasping, what criticism was too violent to be thrown, in honest, sincere anger, by most of the "upper" and middle classes at DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, the Welsh cobbler's ward? From, say, 1909 to the war he was the most hated man in England. Now Lord CURZON panegyrises him before the Primrose League, the quintessence once of the aristocratic and conservative beliefs of Great Britain.

There could be no greater praise for the conservative classes or for LLOYD GEORGE. Is he the best man to beat Germany, to save England and civilization? Then what does anybody care for his past policies?

THE BATTLE OF THE RESERVES.

A new "drive" for the strategic railway centre of Amiens and even more vigorous attacks in the Ypres sector may be expected from the Germans, in the judgment of the British Director of Military Operations. "The bulk of the German re"serves is still in rear of the Somme "front," he says, "and it must be as"sumed that the enemy's big main "effort will be in that direction." There has been enough clear weather recently on the western front for methodical air reconnoissance, and it has not been difficult to ascertain where troops are massed in the rear on both sides. Unless the Germans abandon their first design to drive through at the point where the French and British armies are linked up, or in that vicinity, there will be no diversion of troops from the Somme front to the north. Moreover, the Germans have to be on their guard against a great counterstroke by General FOCH southeast of Amiens, for there the French have done significant "nibbling."

A resumption of wave assaults by the Germans in the Ypres sector, and particularly in the Kemmel hills, has been predicted, on the theory that they must push on or confess failure by retiring. They cannot dig in and remain where they are without exposure to conditions that might prove more damaging than retirement to chosen defenses. In their present lines the Germans are contending with difficulties of supply, and they do not know when reserves will give the Allies a considerable superiority over them. They cannot afford to be driven back in the north while most of their divisions are massed along the Somme. There seems to be no alternative to continuing the advance toward the Hazebrouck-Ypres railway, whatever the cost.

The British Director of Military Operations states nothing new when he says that "the end of the battle "will come when one side exhausts "its reserves or reaches the end of "its resources." That time may not be long postponed. The next move in the German offensive should bring it appreciably near. There can be no doubt that French and British losses since March 21 have been less than those of the enemy. A week ago the British military representative at Washington estimated Field Marshal HAIG's casualties at 250,000. To these must be added the losses of the past week, which are given as 40,004, bringing the total near 300,000. There is no way of estimating the cost of the great battle to the French, but they, too, must have lost heavily. As the Germans have nearly always attacked, their butcher's bill is enormous.

The question of reserves would seem to be of more serious concern to the Germans. There is a factor that operates to the advantage of the Allies: that is, the constant reinforcement of their lines by the Americans and Italians, whose fighting material is of the most promising character. Every day brings more American battalions to the port of disembarkation; every day more troops trained in France are going to the front. It is said that 250,000 Italians are now available, and this number will be doubled. It has been officially stated that there are now 500,000 Americans in France. In the matter of reserves time will fight for the Allies. As the Bulgarians are satisfied with the ground they hold, and, moreover, have to consider an Anglo-French offensive in Macedonia; as the Turks are tied to enterprises in Asia Minor and to Constantinople, and as the Austrians are vehemently opposed to fighting on the western front, Germany must find her reserves at home, and the supply is not inexhaustible.

WHY MR. HILLQUIT?

Notices have been sent out directing the attention of woman voters to a meeting to be held "under the "auspices of the Woman Suffrage "Party," at which four speakers, one representing each political party, will expound their respective doctrines. The Democratic Party is to be represented by Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, the Republican Party by Senator ALBERT OTTINGER, the Prohibition Party by Dr. RALPH MEYERS, and the Socialist Party by MORRIS HILLQUIT. The notice thus exhorts the woman voters:

> You must decide whether you are Republicans, Democrats, Socialists, or Prohibitionists if you are going to enroll on May 25.

MORRIS HILLQUIT is a man of much ability. All last year he was devoting that ability to the job of building a backfire against the United States in its war with Germany. "Under "the auspices of the Woman Suf"frage Party" the woman voters of all parties are invited to come and hear him as if he stood on precisely the same footing as Senator WAGNER, Senator OTTINGER, and Dr. MEYERS, in respect to loyalty. This appears to indicate that the Woman Suffrage Party sees nothing in Mr. HILLQUIT's opposition to the course of his country in time of war which makes it inadvisable to invite prospective voters to hear him talk.

The answer will presumably be that Mr. HILLQUIT is invited to talk, not on the war, but on socialism. The Woman Suffrage Party might easily have got a Socialist speaker who had not made himself obnoxious to patriotic Americans by his open and excessively clever work against the cause of his country in time of war. It would be too much to expect these ladies to invite an out-and-out American like Mr. SPARGO or Mr. RUSSELL—both of whom are brilliant expounders of socialism—because they have been read out, or have read themselves out, of the disloyal political party that Mr. HILLQUIT and Mr. BERGER control. But they could have found Socialists in good party standing who have not been guilty of obstructing this nation in its war. Congressman MEYER LONDON is such a Socialist. They picked out Mr. HILLQUIT either because they preferred him in spite of his unpatriotic course, or because they actually regard the war as a matter of opinion, on which individuals calling themselves Americans may properly differ; because in their minds it affixes no stigma on a man that he should be an ingenious obstructionist of his country's cause.

A REPRESENTATIVE AUSTRIAN.

Since one of Count CZERNIN's latest Pecksniffisms was the grabbing of Rumanian territory by way of "correction" of frontiers, and not at all by annexation, after the ruder German manner, it may interest students of the high Austrian, in Count OTTOCAR's case, the high Bohemian, aristocracy, and students of the Count himself, become so familiar a figure in the last fifteen or sixteen months, to recall a Rumanian "appreciation" of him. The Count was Minister at Bucharest up to midsummer of 1916. His appreciator is TAKE JONESCU, one of the most famous and democratic of Rumanian statesmen and the editor of La Roumanie.

"Count CZERNIN," wrote Mr. JONESCU, "is a thoroughly typical Austrian." The student of Hapsburgian whimsicalities is sure that there is no such thing as "Austria," or an "Austrian." "Austria" is a piece of "Asia," Vienna wits will have told him long ago, and an Austrian nation or people is not. Therefore, there cannot be such a thing as an "Austrian." Ah, but there is, as Mr. WICKHAM STEED had assured us before Mr. JONESCU. There is the aristocratic-bureaucratic clique, compact of all nations, living on the Hapsburg doorstep. "These people," says Mr. JONESCU, "speak German "among themselves, but their men"tality is not German. Whether "they be of Czech, Polish, Italian, "Croat, or German origin, they are, "in fact, neither Czechs, Poles, Ital"ians, Croats, nor Germans. Until "lately they might even be of Magyar "origin, and yet no true Magyars. "These people, the members of this "little clique, are Austrians. They "are, indeed, the only Austrians in "the world. Their essential charac"teristic is a lack of real intel"ligence."

They have charming manners, and a cunning which takes the place of intelligence. This is no new picture of bureaucratic Vienna. Mr. JONESCU found Count CZERNIN "a very representative Austrian," of delightful manners. "His intelligence is of the "most rudimentary order, but cun"ning supplies its place sometimes, "even to advantage." Moreover, he has a sense of humor, not too exalted, if it be judged by his remark, not too new, to a Bulgarian diplomatist:

> Neither you nor I will ever be good diplomatists: I, because I never lie; you, because you never speak the truth.

Did the Bulgarian have the presence of mind to murmur: "What, never?" Was the Count speaking the truth, or merely being polite, when he told Mr. JONESCU in the early days of war:

> You will go to war with us. It is both your interest and your duty. Why, if I were a Rumanian I should attack Austria, and I do not see why you should not do what I would do in your place.

Queer talk for an Austro-Hungarian diplomatist, no matter how "cunning." Mr. JONESCU has said, however, that the "Austrians" are not "as simple as they pretend to be." Was it simplicity, or an affectation of candor, or a fit of veracity that caused Count CZERNIN to tell Mr. JONESCU that "this will be a war of "extermination. If we win, we shall "suppress Rumania. If we are beaten, "there will be no more Austria-"Hungary."

Is there much Austria-Hungary left now, albeit Rumania has been repressed and not suppressed? But it is not the Count's blundering into prophecy that interests, it is his character as "a thoroughly typical Austrian," a fine specimen of his caste; agreeable, shallow, sly folks, with "a certain veneer of omniscience "that hides a deplorable vacuum."

THE FORTY CLIVES.

Not less than forty members of the Republican State Committee, it was said last night, are drawing pay from the State.—THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Governor WHITMAN, Chairman GLYNN, and the Republican State Committee must be astonished at their own moderation. Only forty on the payroll? The force of political altruism could and can no further go!

OUR LABOR MEN ABROAD.

The American Labor Mission has just been visiting the American front. It is due to them and to Mr. SAMUEL GOMPERS, whose constant warm patriotism and far-sighted, statesmanlike wisdom in this war have been of notable service to the United States in many ways, to say that the refusal of the American labor men to have anything to do with the German Socialists has also been a good service to the foes of Germany.

Unfortunately, the French official Socialists have kept up since the war began, and in spite of many disappointments, the illusion that at an "international" conference they might persuade the German Socialists that their countries must overthrow militarism. The German majority Socialists are mere tools of the Kaiser. The humbug Stockholm Conference was officially instructed and conducted, so far as the Socialist delegates of the Central Powers were concerned. Austrian, Bulgarian, and German Socialists were alike annexationists and thoroughly committed to the policy of the military caste. They play the tune ordered by the Government. A Socialist international conference can of necessity be only a trap set by the Central Powers, whose Socialists seek to dupe the Entente Socialists, yet the French official Socialists have been hoping and working for another international conference; and apparently they can't understand why our labor men in Paris this week, like the British Labor Party, reject the idea. "To give them our hand now," said one of the American delegates, "would "be looked upon by them as a sign "of weakness." "I would sooner go to visit the Devil in Hell," bluntly says the British Minister of Labor, than meet the Kaiser's Socialists.

When the majority German Socialists cease to be imperialists, when Germany ceases to be a militarist State, then her Social Democrats can meet the labor men of Great Britain and the United States on equal and honest terms. Not till then.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Too Many Fliers Are Killed. Almost every day of the week it is necessary for the newspapers to record the death of one or several of the young men under instruction in our training camps for war service as aviators. That some "casualties" of this sort are inevitable is probably true, but their frequency gives excuse for something between a suspicion and a belief that the care taken in selecting pupils for these schools is not what it might be—that the examiners are not utilizing to the full the means which science could provide for determining capacity for success in this particular employment.

The candidates are, indeed, rigorously tested, but it is only too evident that the tests are not sufficient, and that the real elimination of the unfit is the rough and cruel one of "nature"—killing them off, that is, and going on with the survivors.

The airplane is a machine differing from any other hitherto used by human beings for purposes of transportation. Its peculiarity is that it moves in three dimensions instead of two. As a result its management is something entirely new in human experience, and the aviator gets almost no such help from his ancestors in the shape of inherited readiness for training as he does, say, in the handling of horses or boats. His life depends on a promptness of muscular response to nervous impulse which by no means all men possess, and, for those that lack it to start with, it is entirely unattainable. The last, and not long delayed, "accident" in a series of fast following mishaps is sure to terminate their aerial careers.

The modern psychologist has in his laboratory devices by which he can determine with certainty, among other things, whether or not a man has the speed in reaction to stimuli that is essential even to an approach to safety—and efficiency—in aviation, and if these devices were all, and expertly, used the number of these lamentable and expensive little tragedies would be much cut down. But such an utterly unpractical person has the psychologist been until recently that it is little wonder that his new powers do not yet get the recognition they deserve. They will get it in time, to the great advantage of every trade, profession, and art.

This Duty Rests on Us All. According to statements made by the woman doctor who repeated at Vassar College an equally absurd and outrageous story about Red Cross nurses returning from France, she told what she had heard, not as true, but as something to be investigated, and told it not to the Vassar students, but to the President of the college. Accepting these assertions as correct—and they have not been denied—it is a pity that so much of editorial and other energy has been wasted in scolding the woman doctor as a distributer of sensational slanders of a sort calculated to interfere with the conduct of the war.

If she deserved any scolding at all—and according to her own account of the episode she did deserve some—it was not for telling what she had heard, but for not making, when she heard it, an instant endeavor herself to trace the miserable fabrication to its unquestionable starting point in the mind of a pro-German propagandist.

That is a duty which, in all such cases, rests upon us all. It is not enough to advise people, as the Grand Jury did, to refrain from repeating tales like this one about the nurses. They should also be urged or commanded, whenever there comes to their ears one of these rumors of disaster or evil deeds, to insist that their informant give his or her authority for it, and then to follow the story back from one circulator to another as far as opportunity permits. By the exercise of intelligence and persistence, information not infrequently can be secured that will prove deeply interesting to the Federal officials whose business is to attend to such matters. Then vigorous action will follow, and somebody will go to jail, or to an internment camp, where that somebody belongs.

That, at least, is what can be expected to happen, and it often has happened. Sometimes, unfortunately, the action taken by these officials is not as vigorous as it might be. For instance, in one of the nearby suburbs, they went to a man's house the other day and seized and took away a fine large portrait of the Kaiser that was hanging quite harmless on the wall. But with regard to what was indicated by the possession of such a picture they did nothing at all. That showed an astonishingly weak sense of relative values—and relative dangers.

A Precedent Worth Imitating. Somebody with a good memory has recalled an incident in American history that will provide an admirable precedent for action in case the so-called Irish Mission, in misguided contemplation, with the Lord Mayor of Dublin as head, should be permitted to cross the Atlantic.

In 1876, while General GRANT was President, CHARLES STEWART PARNELL, an Irishman of a very different stamp from the anti-conscriptionists of today, came over to the United States as a representative and spokesman of his party. His announced purpose was to present an address of congratulation on our completion of a century of national independence, but it was known that he would do it in terms highly offensive to Great Britain. The situation was delicate, for Mr. PARNELL had in some degree, as he deserved, the friendship and sympathy of the greater part of the American people, and the President could hardly refuse to receive him.

The problem was neatly solved by conveying to him in suavest form the information that for a British subject to have a formal Presidential reception in Washington it was necessary that he be officially introduced by the British Ambassador. That settled the matter and Mr. PARNELL went home, disappointed, but without a grievance.

It will be quite safe to let the Lord Mayor of Dublin know that he, too, will be welcome at the White House whenever the British Ambassador chooses to bring him there. That is the regular and proper course of procedure, and it will not be the worse for having about it the element of humor.

American Women and the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just read the speech of Senator Brandegee, as quoted in THE TIMES of Wednesday, and hope you will let me say to him through these columns that there is one organization of women that is not holding "pink teas" or any other social function over the war situation, and that is The National Woman's Defense Club.

If he thinks that the women who are learning to save life, or take it, with a gun are anxious to put "chemises on the men and Plymouth Rock pants on the women," he is mistaken! The women who are equipping themselves to act as home and child protectors, in case of molestation while their men are absent, do not belong to the category of pink teaites, neither are they opposed to giving the soldiers at the front all the cigarettes and whisky they need in their business.

There are women and women, Mr. Senator, just as there are men and men! Please do not condemn us because there are a few queer ones among us—remember La Follette! LURANA SHELDON.

How Can We Help Russia?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I notice in today's issue an article headed "A Lafayette for Russia." It is a prophetic idea; it must come, and it is a privilege and a duty for the United States or probably the Allies to move in the matter now. It would be the greatest blow that could be given to present war conditions, and we have the Lafayette in Theodore Roosevelt. His name would give inspiration and strength and joy to Russia, and the United States would pour out its money lavishly to back him up for the restoration of peace and prosperity to the noble Russian people. No finer people than they. Russia is an open door for us, and we must not miss the greatest item in the present. JOHN McGAHIE.

All Possible Aid for Russia.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issues of yesterday and today I notice some articles relating to Russia, which give me special pleasure and hope for her future. I would like to add one more voice in support of the movement to give her all possible aid in this her hour of struggle and uncertainty. S. M. W.

JUSTICE FOR IRELAND

But That Implies Justice for Us from Her Also.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the United States and the British colonies there seems to linger a belief that the people of the United Kingdom are not willing to be just to Ireland. If, therefore, the problem of home rule that the Prime Minister and the Government of Great Britain is considering cannot be brought to a solution, it would be a good idea for a committee from the United States and British colonies to be appointed to hear the evidence on all sides and draw up a scheme of home rule. It is ten to one that the result would not content the Irish people, but it would at least satisfy people here and in the British colonies that the mixing of oil and water is one of those simple things which are very difficult. You will find Sir Edward Carson and his followers on one side and Mr. Dillon and other Irish members on the other, but it is quite clear that neither of these elements can produce a Home Rule bill satisfactory to the other, and both parties combined could not produce a bill that would content the Sinn Feiners.

Religion undoubtedly is a difficulty in the question. I am convinced that if every man in Ireland were a Roman Catholic, or if every man were a Protestant, or if every man were a Hindu, agnostic, or a Quaker, the Irish difficulty would be settled as easily as the daylight saving or woman suffrage.

England, Scotland, and Wales are mourning tens of thousands of their gallant dead. The British dominions have sent a million or more splendid young men to fight for the cause of national freedom for Belgium, for France, and for the mother country, but the Irish stay at home cogitating over alleged grievances a hundred years or more ago. Today Ireland enjoys the full liberties of her sister countries. This war is for her as much as for us and for the world. Ireland is no Poland or Bohemia. It would be a Belgium and a Serbia today except for Great Britain and her fighting men. This is Ireland's war, and the lesson of the murdered fishermen surrounding her coast should have taught her this, if the colossal tragedy of the Lusitania did not. How can Irishmen of any class or school of thought look on and see lads and middle-aged men of Great Britain, and of their historic friends, France and the United States, die, and still stand aside, while the very principles for which they struggle and about which they feel so strongly are threatened?

What will be the position when the awful sacrifices that other peoples are making gain (as they must do) the victory? Surely it will be a sorry day for Ireland. For good or ill, Ireland and Great Britain must live and die together, and that demands equal service. That issue must be accepted and faced. Justice to Ireland demands justice from Ireland. H. G. A.

Their Folks Here.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Reading today in THE TIMES of the news of the success of the Third Liberty Loan causing greatest rejoicing to the Americans of the battlefront, "not so much because of the success in raising the quota," but because it assured them that the people here were working and thinking harder, reminds me of a pretty story of one of Pershing's honor men speaking at a meeting a few days ago. He was a young private who spoke with a soft Southern drawl and had a homely way of addressing his audience as "folks." He said: "When I get back to France and the boys ask me, as some of them surely will, 'Did you happen to see any of my folks while back home?' I am going to say to them, 'Yes, comrades, I sure did see some of your folks, for all the people back there in the United States are all our folks.'" Generally speaking, it is "our boys over there," so why not in deed and to the utmost the "folks back home"? G. W. BEALL.

THE TRAITORS OF CAPORETTO.

[Although the causes of the Italian retreat that began at Caporetto have not been officially announced, and although there may have been other contributing influences, information received from three independent and authoritative sources establishes the main fact set forth in these lines.—April, 1918.]

Whose feet are these that plod all day
 The moon-white roads of Italy—
Strange prisoners of their guards in gray—
While children hoot and mongrels bay?
 Who may the miscreants be?

Not theirs the gait of those who till,
 They tread the paces of the court;
And, though they bear some shameful ill,
They yet were noble once, and still
 Have trace of noble port.

See, oh the shapely wrists well-born,
 The clanking gyves, as they come nigh,
And how contemptuously torn
The missing gold once bravely worn
 To please a woman's eye.

Can these be Austria's boasted blood
 Debased for some new cruelty—
Her honor draggled in the mud,
Her will swept aimless on the flood
 Of Prussian perfidy?

No, read the riddle as they go:
 Upon their backs once straight and proud,
One word—that Italy may know
Who dealt her the betraying blow—
 Cries "Traditore" loud.

These showed on Caporetto's day
 Against their land a Judas-league
With those who scorn the knightly way
Of manly strength in open fray,
 To conquer by intrigue.

Then was unstrung as brave a bow
 As e'er o'ershot the walls of Troy.
The world was wandering still, when lo!
The conquered Alps, the conquered foe
 Turned swift against Savoy.

Not Teuton valor did the deed:
 These undissevered tongues it was
That launched the fatal lie, whose speed
Outruns the rout, while thousands bleed
 To give the treason pause.

No knightly heritage could save
 These whilom gentlemen of ease,
Who, adding cunning to the knave,
Cried not "Avanti" to their brave
 But poisoned words of peace.

They pass, from all the jeers and groans,
 Whom other groans and jeers shall greet—
Now struck by Tuscan clods and stones,
Now spat upon by Umbrian crones,
 And Rome is yet to meet!

There crowds shall prod them on their way
 With oaths; and women near their time
Against the Evil Eye shall pray,
And patriot statues wreathed with bay
 Shall clamor of their crime.

And one impatient dawn shall see
 Each face turned toward a fortress wall,
And at a shout of musketry
Their all—except their infamy—
 Shall perish as they fall.

ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON.

WANTS WILSON IN FRANCE.

May Bring on a Final Decision in the War, Says M. Loyson.

PARIS, May 12.—A visit to Europe by President Wilson "as our supreme war lord for peace by victory" may bring the final decision in the war, says Paul Hyacinthe Loyson, editor of The Rights of Man, in a statement prepared for The Associated Press concerning the American labor delegation which has just completed its visit to France.

M. Loyson attaches the greatest importance to the moral support given by America to France, which feels the strain of nearly four years of war. He states that the action of the Socialists who assured the Americans they would have no part in an international Socialist conference in which representatives of enemy countries participated was of the deepest significance.

"A political result of unparalleled importance was achieved when all the healthy sections of the Socialist parties rallied to the cause of American labor in waiving their former acceptance of the plan for a conference with enemy Socialists," M. Loyson writes. "This is the greatest political event in Europe since the Russian revolution.

"America must continue and intensify such moral support, for of what avail could be your huge American Army on our front if there were faltering at your rear; if France, which is your battlefield, should crumble morally under your feet? The psychological factor in the war is of paramount importance, for this is essentially a spiritual, yea, a religious contest.

"You must help us to win our moral Verdun. The time may come when the final decision will be made sure by a personal visit of President Wilson to the Continent as our supreme war lord for peace by victory."

WILSON TO BE PATRON.

President Indorses Plan to Celebrate Italy-America Day.

An indorsement by President Wilson of the celebration of Italy-America Day on May 24 was contained in a telegram to Charles E. Hughes, President of the Italy-America Society, made public by Mr. Hughes yesterday. The celebration is a nation-wide commemoration of the third anniversary of the entrance of Italy into the war. President Wilson's acceptance of the post of first honorary patron of the occasion is expected to give the affair a national and official aspect. Mr. Hughes, in a telegram to President Wilson, outlined the purpose of the celebration as follows:

> The Italy-America Society desires to initiate a national celebration on May 24 in honor of the anniversary of the entrance of Italy into the war. We desire that this celebration shall be an expression to the people of Italy by the people of the United States of our friendship and our grateful acknowledgment of the achievements of Italy in carrying out the unswerving purposes of the Allies. Will you do the society the great honor of acting as the first patron of this celebration so that it may be made a matter of public knowledge that the celebration has your approval?

President Wilson, in his reply said:

> It will give me real pleasure to act as patron of the celebration which is being planned by the Italy-America Society for the 24th of May, and I am very much complimented that the invitation should have been extended to me.

Efforts are being made to enlist the co-operation of Italian societies, associations of American citizens of Italian birth and war relief organizations, in giving the celebration a nation-wide character. Responses to the society's request for co-operation are being received from all parts of the country.

John McE. Bowman, Chief of the Hotel, Restaurant, Dining Car and Steamship Division of the Food Administration, sent on Saturday a letter to the State Hotel Chairman in each State asking that in every hotel and restaurant in the country the Italian colors shall be displayed on May 24.

Accompanying the letter is a short account of the Caporetto disaster by Will Irwin, war correspondent, and now with the Committee on Public Information. Mr. Irwin was in Italy at the time of the disaster, and he tells how German troops fraternizing with the Italian troops succeeded in breaking their morale and by the basest treachery broke through the Italian lines and caused the sacrifice of an army.

WILSON ON WOMEN'S HELP.

Commends War Work of Committee of Defense Council.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Formal approval and support of the work undertaken by the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense is given by President Wilson in a letter made public tonight on the eve of the May conference of the committee, which will continue through Wednesday.

In his letter, addressed to Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, the committee Chairman, the President said:

"The work which has been undertaken by the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense has my warm approval and support. Already what the Government has been able to accomplish has been most encouraging, and has exceeded the first expectations of those who were instrumental in constituting it. Many barriers have been broken down, many new ties of sympathy and co-operation established, and a new spirit of co-operation and of devotion to a common cause aroused—circumstances which are not only of the greatest immediate service to the nation, but which promise many fine things for the future. I hope that the conference to be held on May 13, 14, and 15 will be fruitful of the finest results."

At the opening session of the conference tomorrow Secretaries McAdoo, Houston, and Wilson, and W. S. Gifford, Director of the Council of National Defense, will make addresses. Tuesday the President and Mrs. Wilson will receive the members of the conference at the White House.

ASKS AID IN SEDITION HUNT.

Gregory Wants Every Citizen to be a Volunteer Detective.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Every citizen may act as a volunteer detective to assist Government officers in ferreting out persons suspected of disloyal actions or utterances, says a statement issued today by Attorney General Gregory. United States attorneys have been told to co-operate with newspapers in their districts so that public notices can be given of the nearest offices of attorneys or the bureau of investigation to which citizens may refer information that they think will be valuable in running down suspicious persons.

"The District Attorneys are instructed to make it clear," says the Attorney General's statement, "that complaints of even the most informal or confidential nature are always welcome, and that citizens should feel free to bring their information or suspicions to the attention of the nearest representative of the Department of Justice; or if that is not convenient, communicate with the department at Washington."

Hundreds of letters are already being received daily by the department here from persons who believe they have discovered evidence of disloyalty. Although only a small part of the information proves to be of value, the department considers the system of sufficient worth to warrant its extension.

MOVE IN CONGRESS TO LIMIT FUNDS

Cut in Appropriations, Rather Than Another Revenue Bill, Finding Favor.

NO IDEA OF CRIPPLING WAR

Full Money Supplies for Next Ten Months Proposed, with Deficiency Bills to Follow.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—Secretary McAdoo will submit to Senator Simmons, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and to Representative Kitchin, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, on Tuesday, a detailed statement of the nation's finances, and present his argument for another Revenue bill this session. Opposition to the enactment of such a bill before the November elections exists in Congress irrespective of party.

The situation, while admitted to be one demanding greater revenues than provided for in the recent loan and the last Revenue bill, is not regarded by the leaders in financial legislation as requiring immediate action to increase income. In the opinion of both Chairmen of the Congressional committees dealing with revenue matters, sufficient money can be found to meet the obligations until early next year. They will strenuously oppose the suggestion of Secretary McAdoo that "a Revenue bill this session is imperative." Both say, however, that, if Mr. McAdoo can convince them that there is such a need, Congress will pass a bill before it adjourns, but they point out that this will require months of preparation in the committees, and that the time of Congress, until the regular session in December, will be consumed in its consideration.

The estimates from the different executive departments have mounted so enormously that there is a movement under way now in the House Appropriations Committee and in the Military Affairs Committee to scale down the estimates to the barest necessity. In other words, these committees intend to appropriate only as much money as can be used within the next ten months, expecting that, if there is any shortage by next December, this can be met by deficiency bills. It has been figured out that the estimates now exceed $33,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year, and experts have determined that these can be scaled down at least $3,000,000,000 without injuring the vigorous prosecution of the war. This plan is to be pursued in order to make it unnecessary to enact a revenue measure this session, and thus permit Congress to adjourn by mid-July, enabling Congressmen to return to their districts for political campaigning preparatory to the November elections.

Representative George R. Lunn of New York, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, in a letter to Representative S. Hubert Dent, Chairman of that committee, emphasized his desire along this line, and urged that the amount carried by the $15,000,000,000 army bill be reduced.

NEW 12TH AT CATHEDRAL.

Mgr. Lavelle Preaches in Place of Chaplain Now in France.

The annual custom of the members of the old 12th Regiment, nearly all of whom are now in the Federal service, of marching in a body to church on May 12, was revived yesterday afternoon by their successors who compose the new 12th Regiment, N. Y. S. G. Under the command of Colonel H. R. Winthrop the regiment, 750 strong, attended services at St. Patrick's Cathedral. It was also the regimental anniversary, yesterday of the departure of the 12th to the civil war, of the muster into the United States service in the Spanish-American war, and the departure of the former members in the present war.

Two thousand persons were waiting to give them a greeting in front of the Cathedral, when they entered for the 5 o'clock service, with the band playing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." Mgr. M. J. Lavelle, rector of the Cathedral, in an address to the men, said in part:

"I have taken the place of your Chaplain, and I do it with all the pleasure in the world, for he is where some of you expect soon to be—in France. The God-fearing Governments of the world realize that the way to make their soldiers efficient is to make them religious. We find our Government telling our men that they must observe temperance, otherwise they cannot be relied upon to fight for the flag, and urging upon them the advantages that come from clean and moral living."

Mgr. Lavelle said he hoped it would be God's will that before the next official visit of the regiment to the church the United States and her allies shall have been victorious and an honorable peace established over the world.

SHORTAGE OF CLERGYMEN.

War Reduces Number of Young Men Graduated from Seminaries.

Authorities of the Union and General Theological Seminaries, announcing their commencement exercises yesterday, said that the numbers to be graduated from the institutions this year would be smaller than in other years and that the shortage of clergymen would be felt greatly next year. Students in theological seminaries this year have been exempt from the draft because they had declared their intention to become ministers before the declaration of war. Beginning next year all students will be subject to draft, and the authorities said they expected a decrease in attendance.

In normal times the number of pastorates exceeded the number of clergymen graduated from the seminaries, the authorities said, and the shortage will be more acute because of the war. From data gathered from seminaries in all parts of the country the authorities estimated that the number of graduates this year would be about 3,200, or about 400 under the normal demands of the churches. It is believed that most of the men graduated this year will be ordained, although it was said that hundreds last year entered the army.

WOMAN COLLEGE PROBLEMS.

Representatives of Eastern Institutions to Discuss War Service.

A convention of delegates from the leading Eastern colleges for women will begin this week at Vassar to consider an intercollegiate war service committee to, discuss and try to solve the war problems now confronting all women's colleges. Among the institutions represented will be Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Mt. Holyoke, Vassar, and Wellesley.

The Barnard delegates will be Miss Gertrude Hirst, representing the Faculty, and Miss Theodora Skinner, recently elected President of the War Service Council. At an undergraduate meeting held yesterday the following students were elected to the Council: Marcella Henry, Secretary; Marion Levi, Treasurer; Vera Klopman, Chairman of Entertainment; Jane Chase, Chairman of Publicity; Alma Chamberlain, Chairman of War Savings Stamps; Armitage Ogden, Chairman of Emergency, and Victorino Mayer, Chairman of Red Cross.

The college authorities announced that Professor Henry E. Crampton had been appointed Acting Provost of the college for next year, serving during the absence on leave of Provost Brewster.

CREEL TELLS WHY WE STAY OUT OF RUSSIA

Declares We Opposed Action Except by Allied Movement at Russia's Request.

TO AVOID CONQUEST CHARGE

Heckled About Hearst Papers, He Says He Disbelieves in "Suppression of Anything."

George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information, speaking last night before the open forum of the Church of the Ascension, was asked by a person in the audience "Why does America object to Japan entering Russia?"

"Because we feel, without impugning Japan's sincerity in the least," Mr. Creel replied, "that such action would subject us to the same charge we are levelling against Germany—that our motive was one of conquest. That is why we have wished that Japan should not enter Russia until it is an allied movement and at the request of Russia. It would be bad diplomacy and bad tactics."

"Why does not the Government suppress the Hearst newspapers?" was another question put to Mr. Creel.

"In the first place, I do not believe in the suppression of anything," replied Mr. Creel. "I believe in the fullest expression. I believe a man may express anything he likes within the limit of the law. If a man says anything that is seditious or disloyal it is up to the Attorney General to indict him."

Mr. Creel then was asked whether he thought that Postmaster General Burleson was making a "grave mistake" in challenging Colonel Roosevelt to name certain papers "which he suppressed."

"Mr. Burleson has not used the powers of his office to suppress certain newspapers," said Mr. Creel. "Mr. Roosevelt knows that neither Collier's, The Metropolitan Magazine, nor The Tribune has been crushed. Mr. Roosevelt says that I attacked these newspapers, and I say that I shall continue to attack them."

Referring to the Borglum charges about graft in the aircraft program Mr. Creel said: "Ugly charges have been made for the last few days, but I am confident that a searching investigation will prove that not one dollar out of the millions spent has been stolen."

Thinks Roosevelt Helps Wilson.

Another questioner in the audience asked Mr. Creel if it was not interference with the program of winning the war when an ex-President of the United States made a tour of the country criticising the President's conduct of war.

"I tell you quite frankly that I would regret deeply if anything were done to rob us of Mr. Roosevelt's criticism," was the reply. "Not only do I believe in criticism, but always I have felt that Mr. Roosevelt's criticisms have been more calculated to make supporters for Mr. Wilson than anything else."

"Is it possible to carry on war and at the same time allow absolute freedom of speech?" was another question, the person who put it explaining the danger of German agents spreading false reports under the guise of free speech.

"We have never had absolute freedom of speech," replied Mr. Creel. "In war, more than at any other time, it is necessary to have free speech because of the necessity for criticism. There is a difference between free speech and seditious speech. Just as there is a law against indecent speech so is there a law against seditious speech and offenders may be apprehended."

Mr. Creel was informed by another person in the audience that a week ago last night at Madison Square Garden "there were the most seditious utterances of speakers who openly declared themselves as enemies of England." He was told that no attempt was made by the authorities to suppress the meeting and was asked why this was not done.

"I am frank to say that I think the meeting was dangerous and should not have been held," said the Chairman of the Public Information Committee. "It was opposed to the best interest of the United States. Even so, I think it would have been a rather dangerous thing to assume beforehand that certain things would be said and to suppress the meeting. Too much autocratic power would then be placed in the hands of the police. The only thing to have done was to allow the meeting to take its course and to take action afterward. The fact that a bluecoat is on a man's back does not give him the right to say that what I am going to say tomorrow night will be seditious."

The same questioner persisted in following up his last interrogation by pointing out that on the first anniversary of the sinking of the Lusitania a public meeting scheduled for Carnegie Hall was prevented by public officials.

"That was the work of your New York police," he said, "and I do not assume responsibility for them. Preventing the holding of the meeting in the case of the Lusitania memorial was just as wrong as if any other meeting had been suppressed."

Are Fighting for Ourselves.

One of the audience indicated that Mr. Creel had said that the United States had no allies, but only "comrades." "That's what Hearst and the Sinn Feiners say," the questioner remarked.

"What I meant was that we are fighting side by side with France and Great Britain," declared Mr. Creel. "But we have no offensive or defensive treaties with those countries. Thank God we are fighting with France, but we are not fighting for France. We are fighting for ourselves."

"Are free public opinion and the new Espionage bill compatible?" was another question put to the speaker. "Congress is the voice of the people," he replied. "The voice may be squeaky at times, but it is the best there is. The right of habeas corpus is a safeguard of free speech, and we have no right to kick against a law after Congress passes it."

One questioner asked whether the "eagerness of certain predatory interests" did not mean that this was in a sense a rich man's war.

"Of all the unjust and it seems to me impossible things is the theory that this is a rich man's war," said Mr. Creel. "It is a war that is waged more democratically than ever a war was fought. The rich man's son has to go into the trenches alongside the poor man's son. The rich man is going to be taxed higher and higher until he will have but little left. The rich men will be the last to get anything out of this war. We are going to take all the greed out of this war. When you remember the embalmed beef scandal of the Spanish war you ought to throw out your chest in pride over the way this war has been carried on."

In reply to a question as to whether the effort of "certain society people to destroy the German press" of this country was not illegal, Mr. Creel said that the German papers had a right to continue so long as Congress had not abrogated that right. He added that there were thousands of persons in this country who were unable to speak English and that the German press was the only medium by which these persons might be reached.

Mr. Creel said he did not favor teaching German in the primary grades of the schools, but that he was not opposed to having it taught in the higher grades, as there always were some persons who desired to read Goethe and Schiller in the original.

The speaker reiterated that he thought it the glory of America that it strove honestly for peace and that the people were not betrayed "by our striving for peace as a blind for preparing for war."

Asked as to whether he had approved a certain article in the suppressed publication, The Masses, several of whose editors were recently on trial, the speaker said the matter referred to was an advertisement and that no law covered it. He said he did not approve it, had no right to approve it, and did not want to approve it. He declared several times in the course of the evening that he was not a censor and that he did not desire to be one.

The church was packed to the doors and standees occupied the aisles while the overflow took places on the steps in front of the altar.

ROOSEVELT DEFERS REPLY.

Refuses to Answer Burleson and Creel Statements at Present.

Special to The New York Times.

OYSTER BAY, N. Y., May 12.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt today declined to comment on either Postmaster General Burleson's or George Creel's statement in reply to the Colonel's accusation of animosity toward publications that criticised the Administration while upholding the war and failure to punish publications that directly or indirectly aided Germany because they were friendly to the Administration.

It is known that Mr. Roosevelt believes his statement to be sufficient until he makes public his letter to a United States Senator, who will spread it on the Government records. The Colonel will complete this statement in a few days and then, it is expected, every question in the controversy will be gone into.

FIELD MASS AT CAMP DIX.

15,000 Hear Dr. Mulry Declare Victory Will Come.

CAMP DIX, N. J., May 12.—More than 15,000 persons, soldiers, and their friends and relatives, attended the field mass this morning held on the parade ground. Bishop P. J. Hayes, recently appointed by the Pope as Bishop of the United States armies in the field, presided. The Rev. Dr. Joseph A. Mulry of Fordham University delivered the sermon, and Captain George Warren, Lieutenant George Murphy, Lieutenant Joseph McDonald, and Lieutenant John Farrell were deacons and subdeacons.

Dr. Mulry assailed the slacker who uses religion as a cloak for his cowardice. He declared it was not only the country that is calling the men of the fighting nations, but God also. He said it is a war that all must share, a fight that can be ended only when an honorable peace is obtained.

"We must not enjoy a dishonorable peace," said Dr. Mulry. "Go forth, Christian men, to aid the boys who are in the trenches. They are holding them for you. Victory will come. God wills it."

The engagement is announced of Miss Claribel Farnsworth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel W. Farnsworth of Park Street, Montclair, N. J., to Corporal Paul G. Blanchet of Troop A, Military Police, at Camp McClellan, Ala. Another Montclair engagement is that of Miss Dorothy Anderson, a sister of Mrs. Otto Meyer, to Stanley Richard Humbert of the same town.

The engagement is announced of Miss Helen Malvern Hall, a daughter of Mrs. Cornelius Van Horn Hall of this city, to Dudley Vernon Walker of Wilmington, Del. Mr. Walker left the sophomore class at the Stevens Institute of Technology to go into the Tank Corps of the United States Army.

The engagement has also been announced of Miss Constance de Forest Orr, daughter of the late S. Alexander Orr of Troy, to Corporal Benjamin F. D. Bernard, Jr., of Asheville, N. C., but who is now serving in France. Miss Orr made her début in New York several years ago, and is interested in settlement and war work.

Postal Savings Increased $172,153.

Postmaster Patten has just announced the figures for the Postal Savings System for the month of April covering the main office and the different branches in Manhattan and the Bronx. These show that though there were heavy withdrawals made by depositors, principally for the purchase of Liberty bonds and War Savings Stamps, the amount of deposits increased $172,153. Deposits now amount in these two boroughs to $31,811,232, and there are now more than 150,000 depositors.

ROOSEVELT TO TALK FOR PATRIOTISM

Colonel Will Address Meetings in Middle West Under Security League Auspices.

WILL PLEAD FOR EDUCATION

Winning the War and Making America Wholly American to be Features of Propaganda.

The National Security League announced yesterday that it had enlisted Colonel Theodore Roosevelt for its campaign for "Patriotism Through Education." The Colonel will start next week on a tour of the Middle West speaking under the auspices of the league, in Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, and Wisconsin. Outlining the general form of the message which he will carry the Colonel declared to the directors of the campaign that he would lay particular stress on the following three topics:

First—Win the war and win it now.

Second—Preparedness after the war, including universal military training and other thorough measures for adequate national defense.

Third—America now and for all time, including the necessity for active Americanization propaganda to awaken a more responsive and responsible citizenship.

The Colonel's tour will start at Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, on Saturday, May 25. This event will be particularly significant because Wittenberg is a German Lutheran School in the heart of the German American region of Ohio. Dr. Charles G. Heckert, President of the college, will preside and head the Reception Committee to Colonel Roosevelt. Mgr. Vattman of Illinois, will deliver the invocation and only men of German birth or parentage will occupy the seats on the platform.

On Sunday, May 26, Colonel Roosevelt will be in Chicago. He will speak in the Coliseum at Des Moines, on Monday night. This meeting is under the auspices of the Des Moines Branch of the National Security League, of which ex-United States Senator Lafayette Young is Chairman. While in Iowa Colonel Roosevelt will visit the great cantonment at Camp Dodge. He will speak in Madison, Wis., on Tuesday night, May 28 at a meeting at which Dr. C. R. Van Hise, President of the University of Wisconsin, will preside. This meeting is being arranged by the university authorities in connection with the Madison Branch of the Security League. The Milwaukee meeting will be in the Alhambra Theatre at noon on Wednesday, after which Colonel Roosevelt will be a guest at a luncheon at the City Club.

The Detroit meeting will be on the evening of Memorial Day and will be participated in by all patriotic organizations in the city. Mayor Marx will preside, Colonel Roosevelt will be escorted from the depot to his hotel by a procession and after luncheon at the Board of Commerce will review the city's Memorial Day parade.

The Security League also announced yesterday the acceptance by Jacob H. Schiff, of membership on its Committee on Patriotism Through Education. The activities of this committee have now been extended into every State in the Union.

TO FOIL GERMAN INTRIGUE.

New York Bankers Will Counteract Propaganda in South America.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 12.—The National Security League is about to embark in a far-reaching effort to combat prejudice against the United States in South and Central America, to promote Pan-American solidarity, and to make the Monroe Doctrine a living thing.

It will engage the services of experienced Latin-American journalists and cartoonists, and, from a central office, probably in New York, will proceed to flood all Latin America with printed propaganda favorable to the United States, setting forth clearly American disinterestedness in its Pan-American policy. It will also combat vigorously the anti-American propaganda of the German interests in Latin America which have been exceedingly potent for a long time, and likewise will seek to correct errors of method of Americans which have been exploited with large effect for the purpose of inflaming Latin-American sentiment against this country.

This was disclosed today by H. Stanwood Menken, President of the league, who was in Chicago for a few hours, on his return journey from Madison, Wis., to New York.

"There will be a meeting in New York Monday," said Mr. Menken, "at which the details of the plan will be thoroughly discussed by some of the leading members of the league."

According to Mr. Menken, elaborate plans have already been formulated. It is expected that large manufacturing and commercial interests in this country will lend active aid, financial and otherwise. It is purposed with the impetus that the present war status affords to make such progress that neither Germany nor any other nation will be able, after the war is over, to undo the good work.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—An effort to counteract the effects upon the war of German propaganda in South America is to be made by American business men, who will have the support of the United States Government. Most of the members of the committee which will undertake this work are New Yorkers. Much of the work will be devoted to the activities of the Chilean League, organized at a Pan German assembly at Concepcion.

The Chilean newspapers are devoting much spirited comment to the Chilean League, which is the leading German organization in Latin America, and the stronghold of German intrigue there. One of its most recent publications is a chart to demonstrate that the German Army and the German people are the best educated in the world, and statistics are given to prove their superiority intellectually over the British and the French.

Warns Liberty Bond Book Owners.

J. E. Rasach, Treasurer of the Liberty Loan Association of Banks and Trust Companies of New York City, announced yesterday that the organization does not employ collectors to gather the weekly payments on bonds subscribed for through the coupon book system. The association was organized to handle the coupon payments. Mr. Rasach made the announcement to prevent owners of the books from being imposed upon by unscrupulous persons.

TRY TO DISHEARTEN WOMEN

Society Warns of German Propaganda Among Soldiers' Relatives.

The National Association for Mothers of Defenders of Democracy at 622 Vanderbilt Avenue yesterday issued a warning of enemy efforts to dishearten American women. Emphasizing the vital part the mental attitude of women would play in the war, the association declared that the pro-German "whispering" propaganda was being supplemented by certain kinds of letters of "sympathy" and "consolation" addressed to women relatives of men in the service.

In order to combat this work and to keep up the spirits of mothers, who, no matter how patriotic, will at times worry, the association has inaugurated the organization of family and district units of mothers and wives, who have sons and husbands at the front. It plans to bring home a clearer realization of democracy, and through the sympathy of one woman for another to keep the home morale at a high pitch.

The association, it was explained yesterday, has been incorporated under the laws of this State to establish branches in every State, with sub-branches in each city, village, or district where live twenty-five or more mothers and wives who have sons or husbands overseas. There will be active and associate members. The number of active members is limited to three times the number of States in the Union. Any woman who is a mother, wife, sister, or sweetheart of a soldier or sailor may become an associate member on application.

The President of the new organization is Mrs. John R. MacArthur, for many years connected with French societies, and the founder of the Cercle Rochambeau. She is also President of the Women's Auxiliary of the University Settlement.

ASSAILS COPPERHEADISM.

Dr. Billingsley Also Says He Is Against "Spotted Americanism."

Franz Sigel, a son of General Franz Sigel, the civil war commander, in an address yesterday afternoon at a patriotic service of the allied camps and auxiliaries of the Sons of Veterans at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument, advocated war until the military power of Germany was crushed, and praised the part which is being played by loyal Americans of German descent in this as well as in the civil war.

Other speakers at the service yesterday were I. Lang, W. F. Kirchner, Department Commander G. A. R.; Miss Mayme E. Dwyer, Sergeant Marie Duprce, Louis Kutner, Captain J. H. Findlay, and Dr. James J. Billingsley of the American Red Cross. Dr. Billingsley aroused a storm of applause when he declared:

"I am down on the pacifist. I am down on the Americanism of Morris Hillquit. I am down on the Americanism of William Randolph Hearst. I don't believe in spotted Americanism or goose-stepping Congressmen."

Dr. Billingsley concluded by saying that Mr. Hearst could be compared with Vallandigham, the "Copperhead" Congressman of Ohio, who during the civil war, at the suggestion of President Lincoln, was sent to Jefferson Davis, President of the Confederacy, as a gift.

SEES AID TO HOARDING.

Certain Class of Clothing Advertising Criticised by Government Board.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The following is authorized by the War Industries Board:

"The Conservation Division of the War Industries Board has noticed with increasing disapproval the number of clothing advertisements appearing in the daily press which tend to stimulate the sale of clothing by such phrases as these: 'Good clothes will cost more before they cost less;' 'Buy now before they go higher;' 'If you do not buy a suit now it will cost you 50 per cent. more in a short time;' 'When these suitings are sold out you'll have to pay 50 per cent. more for the same qualities—if you get them at all.'

"This is as distinctly a case of encouraging hoarding as it would be to advocate the purchase of another barrel of flour because the demands of our Allies and our military forces would soon exceed the supply of wheat. Such advertising is in direct opposition to the Government's plans for conserving wool, just as the above example of wheat would be in direct opposition to the Food Administration's plans. Such publicity is most undesirable, and all branches of the clothing industry should carefully review all advertising plans and eliminate this highly objectionable feature wherever it appears."

TO EXAMINE FOOD JOBBERS.

Federal Board Will Investigate Several Accused of Violations.

The Federal Food Board decided yesterday to begin an investigation of an alleged ring of jobbers alleged to be doing business in the Produce Exchange Building on a basis prohibited by the United States Food Administration. The board announced that several whose books had been inspected would shortly be brought before it for a formal hearing.

Two jobbers, operating from offices in the Produce Exchange Building, have already been punished, the Food Administration having approved yesterday of the board's recommendation that the license of Morris Moses, a flour jobber, be revoked, and that the business of Theodore Duhrenheimer, also a flour jobber, be suspended for two weeks. According to the evidence, Moses sold flour to Duhrenheimer for $9.50 a barrel, making a profit of $1.95, although the Food Administration had limited such profit to 75 cents a barrel. Duhrenheimer took the flour at the illegal rate because he had made a contract with a customer which he had to fill. The customer, however, refused to take the flour, because he considered it to be of an inferior grade, and Moses would not take it back. Duhrenheimer stored the flour for a time and then sold it to another jobber.

Governor Whitman will open the Milk and Dairy Exhibition at the Grand Central Palace on May 20, and United States Food Administrator Herbert Hoover will speak at the exhibition on May 23, discussing problems connected with the production and distribution of milk.

SHOWS FOOD VALUE OF MILK

Use as a War Duty to be Urged at Exposition Here on May 20.

Exhibits from Johns Hopkins and Cornell Universities are to form part of the features of the National Milk and Dairy Farm Exposition to open at the Grand Central Palace on May 20. Miss Alice Lakey, who assisted in the enactment of the Pure Food bill, and is directing the women's part of the exposition, announced yesterday that she desired the co-operation of 100 women from all sections of the country to assist as a general committee to encourage the further use of dairy products as a war duty that other foods may be conserved for the fighting forces.

"It is our desire to acquaint all women with the food value of milk," said Miss Lakey. "Women are heard to complain that the price of milk has been raised, but if they realize fully the great food values of milk they would not consider it costly at any price. The fact is that the price of milk has been less affected by the war than that of any other food."

MILITARY AGREEMENT BY CHINA AND JAPAN

Tokio Presses for Its Signature—Changes in Peking Cabinet Expected.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, May 12.—In regard to the negotiations between China and Japan it is understood that the military representatives have reached an agreement which will be submitted to the Cabinet for approval and signature. The Japanese are insistent upon immediate signature. Influenced by telegrams from the provinces, the Premier may publish a partial statement of her demands. Feeling is running high against the Premier.

The White Government forces have recovered a portion of the lost territory in the south, but confidence in the Government has not increased, and changes may be expected at any moment.

Telegrams received from the northern frontier report Bolshevist activity. The trains on the Peking-Hankow Railway now include an armored car with military protection against brigands.

WOULD REVISE HISTORY.

Prof. McLaughlin Supports English Hands-Across-the-Sea Idea.

LONDON, May 12.—In connection with the visit of Professor Andrew C. McLaughlin of the University of Chicago and Charles Moore, who have come from the United States to lecture in the universities of Great Britain on the causes leading to American participation in the war and ideals for which their country is fighting, the Observer suggests that consideration be given to an agreed history of the English-speaking world. It says:

"The later decades of peace and the benefits therefrom, together with all the democratic developments of this country in the nineteenth century, must have their chapters, as well as the earlier history, in which events less happy hold a place. At the present moment American histories have little to do with English history since 1815."

On being interviewed, Professor McLaughlin approved the idea. The Observer says. It was his opinion that most American students did not realize how very much England was now like America, and how essentially similar was the attitude of the two nations toward life and political duty.

"Every American history," said he, "ought to emphasize the fact that we have lived side by side with Canada for a century without a serious difference of opinion. Their frontier, 3,000 miles long, is the best defended line in the world, because it is based upon mutual confidence and respect.

"Germany is always talking about the rectification of boundaries. It is better to have boundaries supported by rectitude."

Another way of building up common opinion, said Professor McLaughlin, was by having English and American scholars working together and exchanging opinions.

HONOR JOAN OF ARC.

Service at Statue for 487th Anniversary of Delivery of France.

The 487th anniversary of the delivery of France by Joan of Arc was celebrated by appropriate services yesterday at the Joan of Arc statue, Riverside Drive and Ninety-third Street. The service was the American echo of the three days of prayer and church ceremonies being held all over France at this time. The pedestal of the Joan of Arc statue was covered with palms, fleur-de-lis, and other floral offerings from French, English, and American organizations. A large number of French sailors attended the exercises. The teachers and pupils of the Joan of Arc Public School, Amsterdam Avenue and Ninety-third Street, marched to the statue and opened the services with the singing of the "Marseillaise" in English. An address was given in English by Dr. George F. Kunz, President of the American Scenic and Historical Society, and Miss Adele Woodward and Mme. Marie-Agate Clark, Vice Presidents of the Lycée Société des Femmes Française in New York, delivered addresses in French commemorating the feminist movement as exemplified by Joan of Arc and her modern sisters on the battlefields of France.

Mlle. Marie Grey of the Hotel Martha Washington, who is Secretary of a committee of French women working for the erection of a statue of Joan of Arc in Washington, D. C., as a mark of appreciation from the women of fighting France to the women of fighting America, gave original readings on the life of the "Maid of Orleans."

Young women from the Maison de Jeanne d'Arc, at 253 West Thirty-fourth Street, accompanied by sisters of the order, placed floral offerings on the statue, and sang the "Marseillaise" in French. Delegations from French societies in the city attended, and a large number of French citizens and students joined in the patriotic exercises, which closed with the singing of "The Star-Spangled Banner."

PARIS, May 12.—The celebration of the fête day of Joan of Arc was carried out with unusual fervor, notwithstanding the rain that was falling. There was no formal procession and no speeches, but groups of people, carrying flags, deposited wreaths at the bases of monuments erected to the memory of Joan of Arc. The Patriotic League, aided by the Boy Scouts, placed a large wreath of immortelles on the statue in the Place de Rivoloi.

The statue of Joan of Arc outside the Rheims Cathedral, which has been somewhat damaged by the German shell fire, is now removed to a place of safety.

BENEFIT FOR THE SEVENTH.

$2,500 for Comforts Realized at the Century Theatre.

The machine gun company of New York's new 7th Regiment arranged a performance at the Century last night for the purpose of supplying the men of the old 7th, now the 107th Infantry, U. S. A., with comforts and luxuries which they would otherwise lack, and by their efforts were successful in raising about $2,500. A portion of this sum will be turned over to the Women's Auxiliary of the regiment, which, having already supplied some 3,000 garments, recently found itself short of funds.

Among those who attended last night's performance were Adjt. Gen. Charles H. Sherrill, commander of the New York National Guard; De Witt Clinton Falls, now Colonel of the 7th, and Maj. Gen. Daniel Appleton, the 7th's former commander. The sudden calling away of the French Blue Devils prevented their scheduled appearance, but a detachment of the Women's Motor Corps, under the command of Captain Helen Bastedo, offered an exhibition drill and was enthusiastically received.

Raymond Hitchcock, with gout and cane, hobbled on the stage about 9:30 to take his place as master of ceremonies, previously filled by Harry C. Browne. Later Hitchcock and Leon Errol appeared together. The 7th Regiment Band played, and the program also included Riccardo Martin, Eleanora de Cisneros, Dorothy Follis, Walter Brower, Alicia Salmon, Margaret Sumner, Bessie Wynn, and James Watts.

CO-OPERATE WITH Y. W. C. A.

Business Women's Organizations to Aid in Furthering War Program.

For the purpose of acting as a connecting link between business women's organizations of the country and the National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, a committee of twenty-five women was selected yesterday at the final session of the two days' conference of 100 representative business women with the National Board. The conference was held at the Y. W. C. A. Building, 600 Lexington Avenue, and was the result of the desire to use the business women of the country to aid the program for war work and for the betterment of social and economic conditions among women.

Toward the end of the meeting yesterday a committee appointed by the business women present presented a resolution to indorse the co-operation of all workingwomen's organizations with the Y. W. C. A. in its war work "for the purpose of protecting and promoting the interests of women in industrial and commercial life, including suitable dress for women in business, proper working conditions, equal pay for equal work, promotion of business opportunities and advancement, the securing of standardization of morals, and the encouragement and development of efficiency in all the activities of the world's work."

The committee of twenty-five women includes one business woman from each of the eleven Y. W. C. A. field centres, and fourteen additional business women. Miss Edith Spencer of the National City Bank was chosen to head the committee, and Miss Mary Johns Hopkins of the Provident Life Insurance Company was selected Secretary. Miss Lena M. Phillips of Lexington, Ky., will do the liaison work for the two organizations.

BENEFIT BRINGS IN $77,000.

Hippodrome Crowded at Performance of Vaudeville Artists.

Vaudeville and its artists had their night at the Hippodrome last night. The headliners of the varieties, together with many who are not headliners, turned out en masse to appear at the second annual benefit performance of the National Vaudeville Artists, the official organization of vaudeville people, and known professionally as the N. V. A. The crowd which gathered to see them had to be seated partly on the stage, and announcement was made that the receipts for seats were in the neighborhood of $40,000. This sum, it was explained, was made possible by the sale of about 20,000 tickets to out-of-town vaudevillians, who bought with no expectation of attending. Program advertising totaled $37,000, bringing the total to $77,000.

Even the biggest of headliners restricted their acts to a few minutes, but even with this condensation the program ran to a late hour. A few of those who appeared were Irene Franklin, Sophie Tucker, Emma Carus, Bessie Clayton, Conroy and Le Maire, the Three Dooleys, White and Haig, Trixie Friganza, Nan Halperin, Harry Houdini, Dorothy Jardon, Mollie King, Grace La Rue, Eddie Leonard, McIntyre and Heath, Rooney and Bent, Victor Moore, Eva Tanguay, Swor and Avey, and Jack Wilson.

SUPERGUNS LESS EFFECTIVE

Paris Not Frightened in the Least, Writes Miss Vail.

The New York office of the American Fund for French Wounded, 73 Park Avenue, made public yesterday a letter received from the Treasurer of the Paris branch, Miss Annie M. Vail, in which she describes her experiences in the bombardment of Paris by the German long-range guns.

"The panic counted upon by the Germans from their latest attempt to terrorize us," writes Miss Vail, "has not resulted to any material extent. One sees the shops open as usual, and the children and their mothers are out in the Bois. So far Paris has not been really frightened in the least."

According to Miss Vail, the long-distance firing of the Germans appears to be less effective now than it was at the beginning.

The Fund for French Wounded was established at Paris by Mrs. Benjamin Lathrop at the beginning of the war. Mrs. Charles M. Chapin is the Chairman of the committee in charge of the work here, which has contributed supplies to 1,400 hospitals in France and maintains refugee depots and dispensaries.

N., killed in an airplane accident in 1915, and pulpit furniture given by Mrs. Samuel Josephson in memory of her mother, Mrs. Henrietta Baah, were unveiled at the Free Synagogue at Carnegie Hall yesterday by Dr. Stephen S. Wise.

DELAY KOHLSAAT FUNERAL.

Family Awaits Arrival of Judge's Son from Kansas City.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 12.—Arrangements for the funeral of Judge C. C. Kohlsaat, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, who died suddenly Saturday night at the age of 74 years, will be made tomorrow. Resident members of the family awaited the arrival of his son, Edward C. Kohlsaat, President of the Kansas City Missouri Title and Trust Company, before making definite plans. It is probable that the services will be held at the residence, 324 South Ashland Avenue.

Post mortem examination of the body today showed that Judge Kohlsaat's death was due to cerebral hemorrhage instead of heart disease as at first believed. He retired apparently in good health at 10:30 Saturday night, and a little later called to Mrs. Kohlsaat. He died shortly after she reached his side.

Members of his family today said that Judge Kohlsaat was not of German parentage, as has been stated in his standard biographies. His father was Reimer Kohlsaat, an officer in the Danish Army under King Frederick VIII., who immigrated to Illinois in 1835. The Judge's mother before her marriage was Sarah Hull, who was born in Surrey, England, and came to Illinois with her parents.

Judge Kohlsaat is survived by his widow, five brothers and sisters, and four children. One of his brothers is Herman Henry Kohlsaat, former editor of The Record-Herald and other newspapers. He was appointed to the bench by President McKinley.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Writing Good News Into Quotations

Wall Street habitually looks at prices before attempting to estimate the value of developments affecting them, and emphasizes the favorable or unfavorable aspects of a situation according as quotations have moved forward or back. So it was that the spirited movement which got under way at the beginning of last week gained momentum in each succeeding session and, closing without any signs of a check, turned discussions to the cheerful phases of the agricultural, business, and political outlook to the almost complete exclusion of unpleasant news. As a matter of fact, the new developments of the week, encouraging as some of them were, did not satisfactorily explain an increase of 158 per cent. in the volume of transactions over the week previous, and gains running from 1 to 16 points in prices. Many of the favorable factors merely continued, though they were discovered for the first time, because such a market called for examination. The fact is that the successful closing of the third campaign to place a large issue of Government bonds released a tide that had been piling up for several weeks. There was not a single new development of importance in the steel industry, for instance, unless the announcement of the construction by the Steel Corporation of a huge plant without profit for the making of Government ordnance be twisted around to mean added prosperity, and yet there was abundant reason for the rise in Steel once known factors were brought together. It was a general recognition of favorable changes that have been coming about for some time, rather than new developments immediately preceding the rise, that brought out such a volume of security buying. Once started under such favorable auspices the market rapidly spread in influence as the public's attention was attracted to its fluctuations.

This is not to say that the week was not productive of news that ought to have an important bearing on security values. The manner in which the Liberty Loan campaign was wound up was itself an element of far-reaching importance. Up to the final hours sales were below expectations at this centre, and it seemed that the quota could not be filled except through recourse to the committee's emergency power to call upon institutions to increase their subscriptions. Despite all efforts to get subscriptions in early there was a tremendous volume that was not reported until the last day. That was perhaps an inevitable result in a campaign directed primarily at the individual. It was the aim of the workers to effect a better distribution of the 4¼s, and the real force of their labors was not made apparent until the late returns were in. Now it appears that fully 17,000,000 subscriptions were obtained, which means a much smaller individual average than was obtained in either of the first two sales, 4,000,000 subscribers taking the $2,000,000,000 of the first loan and 9,400,000 the $3,808,000,000 of the second. With less than 40,000,000 income producers in the nation, the intensive results secured in this drive speak for the thoroughness of the effort. We are reaching the point where nearly every self-supporting citizen in the land will be an active partner in the enterprise upon which the United States has staked its future. As in most instances the purchase of a bond requires closer supervision over expenditure or increased effort in the way of production, the ultimate good to come out of the struggle to pay for the war will be beyond calculation.

It was a favored saying with James J. Hill when asked about the crop outlook that it was a long way between the May report and the half-bushel measure. It is much too early to assume that the United States will realize the expectation of a billion-bushel wheat yield this year, and yet early conditions are so favorable that it is easily possible to imagine that goal almost, if not quite, reached with this year's harvests. The May 1 report of the Agricultural Department disclosed a greater area of abandoned Winter wheat than had been looked for, though less than half the amount thrown out last year, but, more than offsetting this, an increase of nearly 10,000,000 acres put under cultivation, and the greatest improvement in condition over the April 1 report than was ever shown in a single month. To a greater or less extent, depending largely upon the ability of farmers to get help, the abandoned acreage will be planted with Spring wheat, which may materially improve the present outlook for a record crop. On the May 1 showing this year's yield, if favoring weather continues, will be the third largest in history, and at least 150,000,000 bushels better than last year's production. The condition on May 1 was 86.4 per cent., comparing with 78.6 per cent. on April 1, and the ten-year average of 85.7 per cent. Similar conditions in Canada promise a substantial contribution from our northern neighbor to the exportable surplus which is so sorely needed on the Continent.

Preparations looking to the participation by the United States in the war on a scale commensurate with its wealth and population continue to be confused by the storms raised by charges of inefficiency and worse, the counter charges, and the acrimonious debate over the need for investigations, but that they are making great progress no one can deny. Secretary Baker's own statement that there are now more than 500,000 American troops in France came coincidentally with the most cheerful news on the shipping situation that has appeared. The shipyards of the country have overcome the handicaps that were put upon them by the shortage of steel and the difficult weather, and are going to beat the schedules laid out for them. Admiral Sims has cabled reassuring news as to the ability of the Allied fleets to hold the submarine menace at a minimum, so that the prospects for victory in the race of the builders against time are growing daily better.

Legislation that is designed to remedy an evil, but which would manifestly operate to create a worse one, is proposed in the bill which has received the approval of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency to provide a guaranty of deposits of $5,000 or less in national banks. Of its many obvious faults, not the least is the proposal to penalize soundly managed institutions with an assessment to cover losses for the protection of those who use the other kind.

Canadian Wheat Crop Showing.

TORONTO, May 10.—The wheat of 1918, upon which so much depends, is already showing above the ground, according to a detailed crop report received at the head office of the Canadian Northern Railway here this morning from the agents along its lines in Western Canada. Out of 200 agents reporting, all but some 64 reported seeding of wheat completed in the week ended May 4. The remainder would have sufficient time from that date to complete their operations. Advice that wheat was showing above the ground, in some cases to a height of several inches, came from 38 agents. The farmers are now turning to the seeding of coarser grains.

WANTS 6-CENT FARES ON SUBWAY LINES

Recommendation of Merchants' Association to Meet Wartime Conditions.

POINTS TO LARGE DEFICITS

Says Increase Would Draw Funds from Nonresidents to Lessen Tax Burden.

The Merchants' Association announced yesterday that it favored 6-cent fares on the subway lines of New York City. Its decision was based on the report of the association's Committee on City Traffic, of which H. H. Porter is Chairman, which asserted that the present fare was resulting in heavy deficits which the city had to meet, and was also greatly reducing the city's ability to borrow, because of its investment in non-self-supporting subways. The report was as follows:

"Under the terms of the contract now existing between the City of New York and the Interborough Rapid Transit Company for additional rapid transit railroads, the city becomes obligated for any deficit arising thereunder.

"While a moderate deficit during the first years of operation was anticipated, the recent great increase in the cost of labor and materials seems to assure a much larger annual deficit than originally estimated.

City's Interest Obligations.

"The city's annual interest obligations upon its investments made under the contract will approximate $4,500,000. No part of the revenue will be immediately available to meet the interest charges, all the revenue being absorbed by prior preferential charges. The interest fund must therefore be provided for, either by taxation or by increasing the revenue from the city-owned railroads by an increase in the rate of fare.

"If taxation be relied upon the burden will fall solely upon the already overburdened taxpayers of the city; if the revenue be increased by raising the fare to 6 cents, the additional revenue will be drawn from the users of the lines, including several hundred thousand commuters and other nonresidents who contribute no taxes to the city's support.

"So long as the deficit continues, the properties are non-self-supporting and the bonds issued for their construction must be included in determining the city's debt limit, whereby the city's borrowing power is restricted approximately $100,000,000. If the deficit be abolished by increasing the revenues, the properties at once become self-supporting, and the city's borrowing power is at once increased by $100,000,000.

Favors Higher Fares.

"We believe that, under these conditions, it is manifestly for the city's best interest that the rate of fare be increased from 5 to 6 cents, particularly in view of the offer of the Interborough Company at once to pool the earnings of the existing lines with those of the new lines—a waiver which precludes the Interborough from receiving any share of the increase in revenue accruing from increased fares, and makes the city the sole beneficiary.

"We, therefore, recommend that the association advocate the suggested increase, through suitable communications to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and the Public Service Commission, whose concurrent consents are necessary to the required change in the existing contract."

Jersey Cities to Vote Tomorrow.

Three cities in Essex County, N. J., are to hold commission government elections tomorrow. But the results in no one instance will be known for possibly a month, as there are many soldiers eligible to vote. In Belleville there are twenty-three candidates seeking the five Commissionerships, and fourteen candidates are making the fight in Orange. Irving has twenty-two candidates in the field.

British Production of Airplanes and Machine Guns Especially Marked.

BEDFORD, England, April 11.—F. G. Kellaway, Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Munitions, in a speech dealing with the output of munitions for the British Army, said the increases for the first two months of the year, compared with the first two months of 1917, were: Light guns, 30 per cent.; medium guns, 57 per cent.; heavy guns, 38 per cent.; machine guns, 96 per cent.; shells, 83 per cent.; tanks, 39 per cent.; airplanes, 223 per cent.; aero engines, 245 per cent.

The average weekly production of airplanes, he said, equaled the average production for two months in 1915, while one week's production of machine guns equaled that of five months in 1915.

WAR PLANS FOR CREDIT MEN

Association Will Discuss How Best to Aid the Government.

Plans outlining how the business men of America may give the most efficient support to the Government in time of war will be discussed at the war convention of the National Association of Credit Men to be held in Chicago June 18, 19, 20, and 21. There will be 1,800 delegates present, representing the 24,000 members of the association. Among those who will address the convention are John Burke, Treasurer of the United States; Paul Warburg, Vice Governor of the Federal Reserve Board; Charles A. Hinsch, President of the American Bankers' Association, and Lewis E. Pierson, President of the Irving National Bank here.

J. H. Tregoe, Secretary of the association, said yesterday that one of the principal topics of discussion at the convention would be the great burden placed upon business men by war taxes. Another topic will be the matter of preparing for after-the-war business problems. Prizes will be awarded for the best papers on trade acceptances. It is estimated that $50,000,000,000 is carried annually by the credit men, and that $4,000,000,000 is always on the books.

STATE OF NEW YORK, Office of the Secretary of State, ss:

THIS CERTIFICATE, issued in duplicate, hereby certifies that THE MINASEC COMPANY, a domestic stock corporation, has filed in this office on this 5th day of May, 1918, papers for the voluntary dissolution of such corporation under Section 221 of the General Corporation Law, and that it appears therefrom that such corporation has complied with said section in order to be dissolved.

WITNESS my hand and the seal of office of the Secretary of State, at the City of Albany, this sixth day of May, One thousand nine hundred and eighteen.

C. W. TAFT,
Second Deputy Secretary of State.
(SEAL.)

THE Traffic and Export Manager of a manufacturing concern rated Aa1 desires to form a new connection. His present place is permanent, pleasant and well paid, but offers no further advancement on account of President's sons holding all other executive positions.

He is fully qualified to handle all details of foreign shipping, booking space, insurance for all risks, collection of drafts, foreign credit research, and knows all requirements necessary in order to obtain American export permits.

Regarding domestic traffic, he handles all inbound and outbound shipments, knows routings, how to make claims, trace cars, obtain railroad permits and arrange connections with steamers for export. He now wants to become

General Manager for some manufacturing organization which is in position to take advantage of today's conditions, and conditions after the war, or

Export Manager for a firm that has or desires world-wide foreign trade, or

Traffic Manager for a corporation that covers this country, or

General adviser to a bank with a foreign department that is making a drive to teach the American Exporter the ins and outs of foreign trade.

CITY TO GIVE WEEK TO SELLING STAMPS

Peddlers' Association, Metal Exchanges, and Autoists Will Take Active Part.

The renewed drive for War Savings Stamps enters upon its second week today. Officials of the War Savings Committee at 52 Chambers Street have mapped out an active program for the week, the big feature being Thrift Ticket Day, which falls on Wednesday, when thousands of workers will promote the sale of tickets for the big war thrift festival, which will be held at the Polo Grounds on June 2. Ten thousand voices will be heard in Mendelssohn's oratorio "Elijah," under the direction of Lieutenant John Philip Sousa. His naval reserve band of 200 pieces from the Great Lakes naval training station will participate.

The International Peddlers' Association will hold a war saving day rally on the east side this afternoon. On Thursday the War Savings Metal Exchange, at Fifth Avenue and Fortieth Street, will be opened under the auspices of a committee of women headed by Mrs. Joseph Griswold Deane and Mrs. Charles L. Tiffany. Auto Tag Day will be on Friday, when every loyal automobilist in the city will be asked to attach the war savings insignia to his motor vehicle. A war savings dance will be held at the Ansonia on Saturday evening under the auspices of the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company's War Savings Society.

This week will also witness the beginning of the thrift drive by the Republic and Democratic organizations in Manhattan, with the establishment of war savings societies in every election district. Societies will be organized in the big fraternal bodies, including the Knights of Pythias, the Independent Order of the Moose, Alhambra Order of the Knights of Columbus, the Redmen of America, and the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association.

The distribution will begin today of 150,000 window cards similar to those used in the Liberty Loan and Red Cross campaigns, indicating that they inhabitants of the houses where they are displayed are buying War Savings Stamps. The cards are printed in blue and white, the official war savings colors, with the war savings trademark in the centre in yellow. The wording runs: "We are buying War Savings Stamps issued by the United States Government to help the army and navy win the war."

The initial consignment was shipped to the public schools throughout the city, from which points they will be distributed to the homes of the pupils under the direction of Dr. William J. O'Shea, District Superintendent of War Work, who directed the public school drive for war savings in March. As soon as further supplies are received from the printer they will be placed at every point in the city where stamps are on sale in order that all who buy stamps regularly may display in his or her home this badge of enlistment in the nation's service.

Rehearsals for the Polo Ground festival are now being held in the high schools throughout the city, which have been placed at the disposal of the Festival Committee by Arthur S. Somers, President of the Board of Education. In each high school the older pupils are rehearsing regularly under the direction of Dr. Frank Rix, Director of Music in the public schools, and George H. Gartlan. Members of the choral societies, which are to take part, and volunteer singers are rehearsing under the other directors at the following places:

Commercial High School, under Tali Esen Morgan, every second Sunday at 8 P. M. and every Saturday afternoon at 4.
De Witt Clinton High School, under Louis Koemmenich, every Tuesday evening at 8.
Public School 27, Forty-second Street, near Third Avenue, under Edward G. Marquard, every Tuesday and Friday at 8 P. M.

In addition to the rehearsals in the city Mortimer C. Wiske, director of the Newark Festival Committee, is training the Jersey singers who will participate in Newark. Between seven and eight thousand singers have already enrolled in the great chorus and the Festival Committee sent out an appeal yesterday for further volunteers, especially male voices.

The sale of stamps in the city since the close of the Liberty Loan campaign has totaled $919,370. For the first ten days of May the total was $1,538,720, making a grand total since the opening of the campaign on Dec. 3 of $12,695,099.

GOVERNMENT PRICE FIXED FOR CEMENT

Rate Is 15 Cents Below Present Commercial Levels for Lehigh Products.

MORE BUILDING STONE

Hollow-Tile Fireproofing Goes Up, While Composition Roofing Drops 20 Cents.

Several important changes in building material price tables, favorable to both the distributer and consumer, will go into effect today, according to trade reports.

Perhaps the most dominant feature is the announcement of the final arrival at a price adjustment between the Government and the Portland cement manufacturers of the Lehigh Valley and Hudson districts. This quotation has been placed at $1.75 for Lehigh Valley, or Zone 1 production, and $1.85 for Hudson Valley cement. These levels represent an advance of 45 cents a barrel over the quotations formerly made on Government orders, base Lehigh, prior to the development of higher cost of manufacture since this country went to war a little over a year ago. The new prices are 15 cents below the mill quotation for commercial business.

Simultaneous with this announcement comes word out of both districts that the coal situation is becoming easier and the threatened restriction of output does not now promise to be quite so acute. The larger construction programs outlined by the Government and by the United States Steel Corporation have injected new factors into all classes of building materials, especially with relation to supply, and it is not at all improbable, in the minds of some interests, that a construction program running into the billions of dollars will draw so heavily upon the limited supplies of building materials on hand in the eastern part of the country that orders recently promulgated may have to be revised to permit husbanding of reserves adequate for immediate future requirements.

What was considered a forerunner of a plan to conserve basic building materials developed in the cut-stone trade, when it was revealed that far-sighted distributers, anticipating just such an emergency, had been systematically bringing to the market large quantities of building stone so as to insure operators on institutional alteration work or high-grade private work that could go ahead on private capital of an abundance of practically normal-priced building material.

Today there is piled up in this city, and still coming in, large quantities of ordinary building stone, there being probably more free material of this character on hand here than there has been at any time in recent years. The railroads are co-operating in rushing stone here, but are not now handling the lighterage. So a 10 cent advance is noted.

Another department that has begun to feel some of the pressure of Government business is lime, an increasing quantity of it now being called for in Southern ports from Eastern sources. This is being used partly in the housing developments in Maryland, Philadelphia, and Southern New Jersey.

Composition roofing, in one section of the market, shows a notable price shrinkage this week. Material of 35, 45 and 55-pound grades are off 20 cents, and the same applies to insulating paper. At the same time it was announced that flux, that is used with asphaltum substitute, has been advanced $4, and is now quoted at Maurer, N. J., at $34 and $36, depending upon whether car load lots are called for or less.

Notable price changes, according to the Dow Service Daily Building Reports, became effective last week in hollow tile fireproofing, base, Perth Amboy, N. J. Exterior is now quoted as follows: 4x12x12, $105 per 1,000; 6x12x12, $147; 8x12x12, $178.50; 10x12x12, $210; 12x12x12, $262.50. Interior, 2x12x12, $80; 3x12x12, $80; 4x12x12, $90, and 6x12x12, $120.

Price advances are reported in Newark in almost every commodity. Portland cement at Newark yard is now $3 a barrel, and $3.15 delivered; Rosendale, $2, as against former price of $1.60, and a delivery price of $2.15. Lime has advanced from $1.90 to $2.60, yard, and $2.75 delivered. Plaster that was formerly quoted at $2.80 is now quoted at yard at $3.60, and delivered, $3.75. Hudson and Raritan brick at Newark, yard, are $12.25 a thousand.

SEES NEED OF RAIL AGENCY.

Merchants' Association Wants Office Established to Aid Exporters.

In a letter to Dr. Edward Chambers, Director of the Division of Traffic of the Federal Railroad Administration, the Merchants' Association yesterday said it had received many protests from its members against the abolition of the "off-line" agencies here of the transcontinental railroads. The association urges the establishment at New York of a central railroad agency to which shippers can go for information and also where they can exchange domestic for foreign bills of lading. The letter, in part, was as follows:

"All of the transcontinental terminal lines have heretofore maintained offices at New York, which offices have been of great convenience to our shippers engaged in the handling of commodities for export to the Far East via the Pacific ports.

"It is generally understood that, acting upon instructions given by the Director General of Railroads, all 'off-line' agencies are to be discontinued. Some of the agencies have already been closed and with others their forces have been materially depleted.

"We understand that all of the offices will be closed by May 15. We are in receipt of numerous protests from our members engaged in this export trade against the closing of these offices, and we therefore urge that the transcontinental lines arrange to take care of the business in such a way that detailed information as to the movement of export freight and the issuance of exchange bills of lading may be continued without interruption until some plan as good or better than the present can be devised.

"We wish to urge the establishment at New York of a central office to which shippers can go for information and secure as well the exchange of domestic for foreign bills of lading, and we urge the matter receive attention so our exporters may know how to conduct their future export transactions."

LEWIS IN THE FIELD FOR GOVERNORSHIP

Attorney General, Announcing His Candidacy, Says He Opposes Whitman Methods.

DENIES LIQUOR FUND AID

Asserts He Will Discourage Use of Money in Campaign—Silent on Aldridge Conference.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 12.—Attorney General Merton E. Lewis announced tonight that he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor at the Fall primaries. He would not admit that he had discussed the proposition with State Committeeman George W. Aldridge, but merely said that he would look to the Republican electors of the State to favor his candidacy.

"I am opposed to Governor Whitman's methods," said Mr. Lewis, "and to many of his policies. A large number of people entertaining views similar to mine have asked me to become a candidate for Governor. Without obligation to any one in my candidacy and with the sincere purpose of re-establishing party responsibility to the people of the State, I shall be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor on primary day, Sept. 3."

Queries as to whether he would be the candidate of the "Wets" and as to the truth of the report that a fund had been raised by liquor dealers to promote his candidacy, Mr. Lewis said:

"The story that a large fund has been raised by the liquor dealers to further my candidacy is false, so far as I know. The use of money for the purpose of promoting the interest of candidates at the primaries has become a public scandal. I shall not use any money or any other than legitimate means to aid my candidacy and shall discourage so far as possible the use of money by others in the efforts to promote my nomination. I am not the candidate of any combination of individuals of any character."

The Attorney General would not affirm or deny the assertion that he had the backing of William Barnes of Albany, nor would he discuss his conference with Mr. Aldridge yesterday afternoon. He merely said that he expected his friends to take care of his interests, and that he felt he had a chance to defeat the Governor at the primaries.

Friends of Lewis, some of them organization Republicans and holders of office under the Aldridge machine, said that they wished him the best of luck. They asserted that the conference between Aldridge and the Attorney General was an amicable one. While none would confirm the report that Aldridge urged Lewis not to enter the contest, it was said that they parted on the best of terms, declaring mutual regard, and that in any event the strength and influence of the Monroe organization would not suffer. They said that Aldridge agreed to do all in his power to aid Lewis in his election should he receive the nomination.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 12.—Governor Whitman tonight refused to comment on the announcement that Attorney General Lewis would be a candidate for Governor. He said he had heard of the determination of the Attorney General to oppose him. George A. Glynn, Chairman of the Republican State Committee, also refused to comment on the announcement.

BENNETT ATTACKS WHITMAN

Calls for Selection of Governor's Opponent in Open Conference.

Ex-Senator William M. Bennett made public his views on Republican State politics last night, by saying in part:

"Governor Whitman ought to be beaten and will be defeated at the primary. He has made a poor Governor. Ever since his first election he has subordinated the good of the people to his ambition to be President. He has made the Department of Agriculture of New York State the football of politics, and thereby offended the farmers. He repudiated the direct primary in this city last Fall and voted for a discredited Democrat. He has on innumerable occasions shown a keen ability and desire to do business with Tammany Hall and in general has offended the citizens of the State in many matters.

"The anti-Whitman Republicans will demand that the opposing candidate shall be a man of progressive ideas, a believer in the direct primary and a man who will seek to be a real Governor. They will not be content to have a candidate selected for them in secret at a conference of discredited leaders. If an open conference is not soon called of prominent Republicans representing all elements of the party to suggest an anti-Whitman ticket, I myself will soon call such a conference. Also I hope that Judge Cropsey will eventually permit his name to be put forward as a candidate."

ASSAILS SOCIALISM.

Justice Dowling Says Its Growth Is a Menace to the Country.

To overcome what he termed the "alarming growth" of Socialism in this country, Justice Victor J. Dowling of the New York Supreme Court urged the teachers of Catholic schools yesterday, at Cathedral College, to reinforce their movement for the religious instruction of children through their week-day cathechism classes. The occasion was a public meeting of Chapter Theta Pi Alpha, presided over by Mgr. M. J. Lavelle, V. G., rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral, who explained that the teachers of this chapter are doing a great work for the poor children of the city.

"These radical Socialists," said Justice Dowling, "who call themselves by many names, are holding meetings to teach the ignorant that a second French revolution is coming in the United States. They say that this war has proved that Christianity is a failure, but some of their spokesmen are saying that the first great barrier to their revolution is the Catholic Church, which must be removed.

"Some of these enemies of the church have been suppressed by the Government. One of them who was closed out was Thomas E. Watson of Georgia, who scattered more falsehoods about the Knights of Columbus than any of them. Such persons are not only enemies of the church, but they are a menace to the country. Their attacks against the Catholic Church are probably due to the fact that despite their vile assertion that the Knights of Columbus is a secret army of the Popo waiting to be called into action against the country, the church of the Knights of Columbus is recognized today by the Federal authorities as one of the strongest supports the country has in time of war. It has furnished one in three of the army; two in five of the navy, and one-half the Marine Corps. Go on with your good work of teaching the children—education will be needed more after this war than ever before in the world's history."

WOULD PREVENT DISEASE.

National Industrial Conference Board Urges a National Policy.

BOSTON, May 12.—Prevention of disease wherever practicable, rather than compensation for losses incurred by sickness, is advocated as a national policy in dealing with problems of public health in a report on "Sickness Insurance and Sickness Prevention," issued by the National Industrial Conference Board today. A vast amount of sickness is preventable, not only in theory, but as a practical measure and at a reasonable cost, the report declares.

"To fail to apply preventive measures to such illnesses, disabilities, or conditions as will almost certainly respond, and instead to permit them to go uncorrected until the victim becomes a charge on society is absurd," it continues. "Certainly if the State can contribute to the support of the individuals after they become incapable of caring for themselves, it can contribute to prevent them from becoming incapacitated."

Experience with sickness insurance in European countries, it is asserted, discredits the efficacy of insurance as a preventive agency. Instead there is a tendency on the part of the insured to malinger and take advantage of the benefits, a condition vitally important because of the effect on the morale of the industrial workers.

SAVE INSTRUMENT TRADE.

Makers of Surgical Tools to Seek Protection for War-Born Industry.

A conference of the American makers of surgical instruments with representatives of the Federal Tariff Commission will be held in the rooms of the Merchants' Association in the Woolworth Building on Thursday and Friday. The purpose of the conference is to gather data on the development of the industry, forced by the cutting off of importations from foreign countries, so that Congress may consider legislation when foreign competition is resumed at the end of the war.

Importation of surgical instruments from Germany ceased entirely at the beginning of the war, and the United States was called upon suddenly not only to manufacture instruments for domestic use but to take up a shortage in foreign markets when the German instruments disappeared from commerce. Makers of instruments here expanded their plants, and many factories manufacturing sewing machines and similar articles began to make instruments. Part of the shortage also was taken up by importations from Japan, where the surgical instrument industry was expanded.

STRIVE FOR CONGRESS 100 PER CENT. LOYAL

League for National Unity Urges Coalition Against Any Doubtful Candidate.

COMMITTEE NAMED TO ACT

Theodore N. Vail, as Chairman, Demands That No Peace Platform Be Adopted by Any Party.

A committee of well known men and women of both political parties was named yesterday by Theodore N. Vail to confer with Democratic and Republican leaders all over the United States to prevent the nomination of any man of a disloyal or doubtful past and to arrange for local coalitions between the two parties in Congressional Districts where there is danger of the election of a pro-German or half-hearted American to Congress. Mr Vail made these appointments as Chairman of the League for National Unity.

Work will begin at once to provide for such coalitions, where necessary, on a fair and practical basis, so that neither the Democratic nor Republican party shall be compelled to give an advantage to the other side in order to insure the election of true Americans.

The following men were named by Mr. Vail for this committee: Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor; Charles S. Barrett, President of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of America; John Hays Hammond, President of the National League of Republican Clubs; V. Everit Macy, President of the National Civic Federation; Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, President of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association; Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, Jr., President of the National Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage; W. P. Bloodgood, of the Wisconsin Loyalty Legion; John G. Agar, New York City; George F. Kull, of the Wisconsin Loyalty Legion; R. E. Miller of San Francisco; P. H. Callahan, Chairman of the Committee on War Activities of the Knights of Columbus; Frank Morrison, Secretary of the American Federation of Labor, and Ralph M. Easley, Director of the League for National by the league yesterday says:

After setting forth the national need for loyal legislators an appeal sent out by the league yesterday says:

"If in any district it becomes likely that an anti-war candidate may be successful, it is the imperative duty of the two leading parties to effect a coalition against the non-American or anti-American candidate in order to make certain his defeat. An equitable arrangement should be effected between the two parties, covering all such districts as require a coalition in order to avert the election of a disloyal candidate. A peculiar responsibility rests on parties in those districts which are preponderantly partisan, for either party is bound so to direct its affairs that the choice at the primaries, if it be equivalent to an election, shall be between absolutely loyal candidates.

"If in any Congressional or Senatorial election there proves to be danger of the election of disloyal candidates, it will become the duty of Americans, regardless of party affiliations, to defeat such candidates, and to set loyalty to the nation above personal loyalty to the party. The defeat of men supporting the Union in the Congressional election of 1862 did much to lengthen that war, and a like result in the elections of 1863 and 1864 would have enabled the disloyalists to put the Union in peril.

"Let no party nominate or elect to Congress any candidate on a so-called peace platform. The American nation, under the leadership of the President of the United States, Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, is for peace; but a righteous and enduring peace cannot be secured until America and the allied powers shall have achieved victory over the armies and Government of the Central Powers, or their peoples, having repudiated those who have been guilty of willing, initiating, and carrying on the war, shall, in the interest of a just peace, have recovered their right to control their own destiny.

"A Congress must be elected which shall signify to the whole world that the American people are indivisibly united in their determination to go on with the war until its purpose shall have been accomplished. The voice of compromise must not be heard in the next Congress. Whether dominantly Republican or dominantly Democratic, the next Congress must be supremely American."

The new edifice is in a district peopled by many races, and twenty or more are expected to make use of its facilities. They will be permitted to hold services according to their own beliefs and customs in their native tongues and with their own ministers or priests.

Anthracite Shipments for April Were 6,368,372 Tons.

PHILADELPHIA, May 12.—The shipments of hard coal in April, as reported to the Anthracite Bureau of Information, amounted to 6,368,372 tons, an increase of 776,074 tons over the corresponding month last year.

"Despite several record-breaking months during the coal year ended March 31," says a statement issued by the bureau, "and the remarkable showing for the entire year, the April, 1918, shipments are close to the high monthly average maintained during the year."

Theatrical Hotels for Training Camps

Provision for the lodging of members of theatrical companies which give performances at the training camps is being made by the Commission on Training Camp Activities, it is announced, by the erection of small hotels at the camps. At present the nearest hotel to Camp Upton is at Center Moriches, a distance of eight miles, but within sixty days the Government will have completed two small lodging houses, one for the male members of the companies and the other for the female. A similar hotel has already been opened at Camp Devens, at Ayer, Mass., and others will be erected at Camp Dix and Camp Meade.

Celebrates Her 101st Birthday.

Miss Henrietta Patterson of 133 West Ninety-third Street yesterday celebrated her 101st birthday with a party. Miss Patterson was quite the sprightliest of the celebrants, and at the first mention of her two great interests—the Republican Party and the war—she was right into the full swing of conversation. Miss Patterson is a native Manhattanite. In her life she has witnessed the war fever thrice grip the nation, but never, she said yesterday, had it been as strong as today.

SCHWAB PLANS 60% INCREASE IN SHIP PROGRAM

Believes Nation Should Enlarge Plants and Increase the Proposed Production.

SEES NO STEEL SHORTAGE

Labor, He Says, Is Meeting the Country's Call and Supplies Will Be Forthcoming.

WANTS WORK RUSHED NOW

Advantage, He Says, Should Be Taken of Favorable Weather to Increase Shipyard Facilities.

Before leaving this city last night for Washington, Charles M. Schwab, Director General of the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, said that it was his intention to speed up the Government's shipbuilding program.

"It was hoped, he said, to increase it by at least 50 and possibly 60 per cent. He added that he did not want to be in the position of making promises or of prophesying, but simply desired to tell what it was planned to do.

"The vital necessity for ships we all realize," he said, "and I am in favor of increasing present plans so that we will get 50 or 60 per cent. greater results. Of course to do that we would have to enlarge the capacity of the plants building them, and there is no reason why that should not be done. We have the material and the men, and we have the patriotic incentive to do the task well."

"Now is the time when we should build and not wait until later as we did last year. We are going to employ every energy in increasing the country's tonnage. As soon as I saw the necessity for more tonnage than we had originally provided for I asked at once for greater facilities and I propose to have the work started before the Winter sets in. The demand for vessels is greater than was ever contemplated, and we should take advantage of the present season to get the work started. It is by doing that that we are going to be able to add 60 per cent. more tonnage to the program and, furthermore, put the hulls in the water."

In line with this plan to speed up the ship building program, it was said that vessels of larger capacity than some of those originally planned might be constructed. The demand, Mr. Schwab said, was for all kinds of ships in the minimum of time. Asked whether he thought wooden ships were profitable to build for the transatlantic trade, Mr. Schwab said their construction was part of the plan to meet the demand. They met the emergency, he said, although, he added, wooden ships would not attract capital as a permanent investment.

"There is no question of men and material," he continued. "Labor is nobly doing the work and will continue to do it. The men must be well housed and cared for. Of course, in working out the plan for increased efficiency, the work will best be done where labor is to be found, and for this reason we are scattering the work about. Therefore, I have paid particular attention to the plants where there is opportunity for enlargement."

"No matter how many ships you build," Mr. Schwab continued, "they are useless unless there are engines, boilers, and accessories for them. The building of engines and accessories is therefore of vital importance and the work has not been overlooked. We must enlarge our plans for engine building and the construction of accessories.

"I do not contemplate any trouble in obtaining the necessary steel. I believe that production will increase to meet the demand. The two disturbing questions are those of fuel and transportation. Here, however, we are meeting with hearty co-operation and I think these questions will be met and satisfactorily answered."

Mr. Schwab commented favorably upon the work that had been done at the Federal shipyards on the Hackensack River near Newark, owned by the United States Steel Corporation. Nine months ago the site was a marsh. The first pile for the ways was driven on Aug. 8. It was pointed out that the yard now has ways for ten 9,000-ton vessels, a fitting basin, railroads, shops, and other facilities.

Mr. Schwab said he had just completed a two day's inspection of the yards in the New York and Delaware River districts. The work of increasing the capacity of the yards had already been undertaken, he said, and from now on all phases of the work were to be speeded up.

"I know of no obstacle," he said, "in the way of an enlarged program. All conditions seem to favor us and we will devote ourselves to the task that lies before us."

Britain Also to Terminate All Present Trade Treaties

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Co.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 13.—Bonar Law made an important announcement yesterday in the House of Commons in answering questions on the economic policy of Great Britain and her Allies. In reply to Sir Edward Carson he said that in order to leave their country's hands free for the time when peace arrived the French Government had denounced all commercial conventions containing the general clause regarding the most favored nations, and that in view of the probable scarcity of raw material after the war and the necessity for providing for the needs of the British Empire and her Allies the British Government intended to adopt a similar course.

The news of the French Government's decision to terminate its trade treaties was published in a special cable dispatch to THE NEW YORK TIMES on April 29.

URGE 25% INCREASE IN RAILROAD RATES

McAdoo's Advisers Say That $750,000,000 Added Expenses Necessitate It.

EARLY ACTION PREDICTED

Director General Expected to Make New Schedules Effective Within Six Weeks.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Estimates made today by Railroad Administration officials indicate that an increase of at least 25 per cent. in freight and passenger rates will be necessary this year to meet the higher costs of fuel, wages, equipment, and other operating expenses, now set at between $800,000,000 and $750,000,000 more than last year.

Recommendations that rates be raised by approximately this percentage has been made to Director General McAdoo by his advisers. He is expected to act within the next six weeks and to put increases into effect immediately. Shippers will be permitted to appeal to the Interstate Commerce Commission under the Railroads act, and final decision will be with President Wilson.

Such an increase as is proposed would be the biggest in the history of American railways, as the percentage is larger than any ever sought by the railways under private management, and would apply alike to the entire country. Both class and commodity schedules would be affected.

Rate experts of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Railroad Administration are now at work on new schedules. Any increases to be ordered would be arranged in a manner to preserve rate relationship between communities and regions, officials said today, so that industries and commercial interests would be subject to the same degree of rate competition as at present. Passenger fares would be raised under the plan suggested to about 3 cents a mile from the existing general rate of a little less than 2½ cents.

Increases May Yield $900,000,000.

The proposed increases, it is estimated, would yield about $900,000,000—$700,000,000 in freight and $200,000,000 in passenger revenues. This would leave a margin above the estimated increase in operating expenses eventually; but since the new rates would not go into effect until the year was half over, their yield would fall several hundred million dollars short of meeting the expected deficit this year.

It is roughly estimated by Railroad Administration officials that the roads this year will spend between $300,000,000 and $350,000,000 more for wages than last year, between $120,000,000 and $150,000,000 more for coal, and between $180,000,000 and $250,000,000 more for cars, locomotives, rails, ties, terminal facilities, barges for inland waterways, and other supplies and equipment. These figures may be lowered by later developments; but officials who have studied the situation closely are inclined to believe that they are more likely to prove higher.

The estimate of increased wages is based on the probability that the Director General will approve a general scheme of higher pay for workmen in accordance with the Railroad Wage Commission's recommendations, which called for an addition of $300,000,000 to the $2,000,000,000 payroll of last year.

Although the question of the exact prices the railroads are to pay for coal under Government operation has not been settled, officials in charge of purchases are said to have decided that it will be necessary to pay at least 65 cents more a ton than under contracts now expiring. The railroads' coal consumption amounts to about 175,000,000 tons a year.

The cost of extensions and betterments, particularly at terminals, now being planned, can be determined at this time only in most general terms, but officials point out that the financial burden of these will be felt within six

AMSTERDAM, May 12.—Hardly have the Pan German shouts of relief and joy regarding the retirement of the alleged peace lover, Count Czernin, died down when his successor as Austro-Hungarian Foreign Minister, Baron Burian, has angered the Fatherland's Junkers, who are now strongly protesting against another Austrian peace offensive.

In a speech the other day Baron Burian said:

"It is to be hoped that the Bucharest peace will be followed whenever possible by general negotiations which will result in giving a rest to the humanity of the whole world, suffering after nearly four years of war. Our King has made use of every possibility of peace, and today it is still his determination and will to utilize every opportunity to conclude an honorable, lasting peace by understanding. We are on the lookout for peace without being limited by certain formulae."

This naturally arouses Pan German ire, and the Tägliche Rundschau, for example, asks if there is any connection between this new peace offensive and the attack on the German Chancellor by the July peace resolution party, an attack which, it thinks, would appear to have been designed to prepare the ground in Germany for Baron Burian's coming action.

The attack on the Chancellor referred to was that of Herr Erzberger the other day in the Main Committee of the Reichstag, when, in a motion, after severe criticism of the Goverhment, he demanded inter alia that all political and economic questions in the East should only be dealt with by the Chancellor on the lines previously decided upon. Erzberger had considerable support in the committee for this attack on the astounding manner in which the Government is abdicating its functions to the uncontrolled military authorities. The motion was eventually withdrawn, but it will probably come up again in an open sitting of the Reichstag.

Von Payer, the Democratic Vice Chancellor, has let it be known that he will resign if the motion is persisted in. There is a great deal of crisis talk in political circles and Vorwärts throws over the Government completely, together with von Payer, who is accused of now supporting the military party against the Government. It refers bitterly to the deception caused in the masses of the people by the prophecies indulged in by all, up to the highest circles, regarding an early and successful conclusion of the war, and says that the people now believe that the Pan Germans and annexationists are thoroughly on top again.

The Cologne Volkszeitung defends Count von Hertling on the highly original ground that, having concluded four treaties of peace, his reputation has so risen that he alone has the best chance of bringing about a satisfactory peace in the west. The political situation, too, is made more serious by the certainty with which Germania, an inspired organ, proclaims that the equal franchise

Kaiser Demands That Austria Open a Drive Against Italy

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 13.—It is understood here that at the interview between the Kaiser and the Austrian Emperor at German Grand Headquarters on Friday the Kaiser insisted upon a big Austrian offensive being launched against Italy simultaneously with the next German attack on the Anglo-French front. Charles, it is added, has no alternative but to obey the Kaiser's instructions. It is known that the transport of Austrian troops to the Trentino has increased tremendously, while part of the Austrian heavy artillery in France has been sent southward. Austrian soldiers on leave have been recalled, and the prisoners speak of large concentrations of troops on the Piave and elsewhere. An Austrian offensive, therefore, is believed to be imminent, despite the disquieting state of affairs in Austria, where the Slav populations have taken a very threatening attitude.

THE HAGUE, May 13.—Persons who have recently arrived in Holland from Germany, with whom THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent has talked, appear to agree that, although the food situation and other conditions are bad and are likely to become worse, except for grain from the Ukraine, and although the people want peace, the great war chiefs will continue their campaign of conquest and sacrifice, and the people are powerless.

The latest war loan was advertised everywhere as a "peace and victory loan" in railway carriages, shops, and other places, with pictures of peaceful landscapes, peace doves, and farmers tilling the soil. The peace was promised in two months and is now promised in "a few months."

Soldiers will do anything to avoid returning to the front, and even commit crimes in order to go to prison. The severely wounded from the present offensive are intentionally hidden from the public view, and, in fact, few cripples are seen in the big towns, although blind men walk about, led by dogs.

Great Strike Is Expected.

A great strike is predicted for August. Many soldiers no longer conceal their hatred for Hindenburg and the Kaiser. In June the meat ration is to be reduced by half, likewise the butter and margarine ration.

The mother of five children about to be repatriated to England thus describes her average meals of the last six months in Northern Germany:

"We had two slices of bread each for breakfast, sometimes jam, but no coffee or tea. Our midday meal consisted of potatoes and turnips, and the evening meal was again two slices of bread. I had a quarter of a liter of skim milk for five children three times a week by the doctor's order.

"The meat ration in our town was

PARIS, May 13.—The continued delay in the resumption of the German offensive is giving rise to much speculation here as to what possible reason can be influencing the enemy.

French opinion is now inclining strongly to the belief that the Germans have begun definitely to recognize that the growing strength of the Allies through the recent arrival in France of substantial British reinforcements, together with the now respectable number of American troops in the line, will necessitate the massing of much larger forces if the coming blow is to be anything like effective.

Experts here take the view that it is only possible for the Germans to draw additional man-power from one or the other of two sources. Either Mackensen must bring another 600,000 men from the so-called Russian front or the Austrians must be induced to send to the western front at least half a million of the men which they are known to have available in Italy.

The enemy's difficulty, it is believed, is that the Central Empires cannot come to an agreement on the question. The Germans realize that if they withdraw their available men from the Russian front they will be unable to insure that such grain supplies as they may obtain from those regions will not fall into Austrian hands. The Austrians, on the other hand, are much too hungry to deprive themselves, by sending their surplus men to the western front, of the only possible chance of keeping out of German hands what they regard as their legitimate share of the Russian spoils in the form of foodstuffs.

Of the two Austria is in a far worse plight, for in addition to the menace of absolute famine between now and the end of July she is faced with the ever-present possibility of an immediate revolt of the Czechs and Jugo-Slavs should she find herself short of men at the moment when Italy might begin a counteroffensive for the purpose of relieving the pressure on the western front.

It is believed here that Emperor William at the interview at the German Field Headquarters yesterday brought strong arguments to bear on the Austrian sovereign to induce him to send to Flanders half a million men now massed in Tyrol. The natural counterproposal by Emperor Charles would be to send this mass of troops to Italy instead, as the advantage of their going to the western front would be for Germany alone, and it is in Italy only that Austria can hope to benefit.

Another reason for the delay which is put forward here is that the enemy has been so blinded by the extraordinarily successful airplane work of the Allies during the last two or three weeks that it has become practically impossible for him to complete plans for the resumption of the offensive. His recent losses of no fewer than 700 of his best pilots, which is the figure reported by prisoners, must be fatal for the time being under modern conditions of warfare, it is argued.

Reports from all quarters agree that for some time past not a single observation airplane of the enemy has been able to cross the allied lines. This and the fact that there has been an absolute cessation of air attacks on London and Paris appear to confirm the belief that it is through lack of means for observation that the enemy is hesitating to engage against forces as to whose strength and disposition he is ignorant.

Considerable importance is also attached here to the recent reports of further mutinies in German divisions on the western front.

Statement About Army Due to Error, Says London; But Ottawa Insists It Came by Official Channels

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.
Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, May 14.—Messages from the New York correspondents of London newspapers repeating the announcement made in Ottawa that the American forces were not to be used in the fighting line until they had a complete, self-supporting army, created a sensation when received at a late hour tonight, a sensation all the greater because the actual facts were unknown. Efforts to obtain information by telephone were vain, except to elicit the fact that a mistake had been made and steps had been taken to rectify it.

OTTAWA, May 13.—Nothing further has reached Ottawa officially as to the disposition of the United States troops in France. The statement contained in the cable dispatch from the British War Cabinet, and issued by the Director of Public Information here, that the Americans were not to be utilized in the fighting line until they had a complete self-supporting army has not been changed or modified in any way.

Director of Public Information Nicholls said tonight that he had received nothing further in regard to the Americans and that the story was issued as it came to him through the regular official channels. There is a possibility of a mistake occurring in transmission, and investigation may clear this point.

In a statement issued tonight Sir Robert Borden, Prime Minister, said:

"The story reached Ottawa through the ordinary channels, and, as it was not marked confidential, it was given to the press."

OUR GUNS BLOW UP MUNITIONS DUMP

Cause Big Blast at Cantigny and Set Fires, with Explosions, in Montdidier.

SCOUTS KILL FIVE SNIPERS

Foe's Position Becomes More and More Intolerable—Fooled by Alarm Clock.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 13, (Associated Press.)—A big enemy ammunition dump at Cantigny was fired by the American artillery this morning. At the same time two fires were started in Montdidier, followed by numerous explosions.

The weather continues misty and rainy. There was no infantry action today and only intermittent machine gun and rifle fire. The position of the Germans is becoming more and more intolerable, while the Americans are intrenching their positions more firmly. Any hopes the enemy might have had of breaking through in this sector are diminishing.

The Americans take nothing for granted, but return the enemy fire two to one, which is believed to set a new pace in this sector. What appears to trouble the Germans most is that the Americans never turn back when the enemy uses gas. They give him a double dose of the same, with everything else the enemy tries.

Three American scouts yesterday afternoon attacked a German strong point in the Luneville sector, in which enemy snipers had a nest and had been operating with such success that several Americans had been killed by their bullets.

Kill Officer and Four Men.

The scouts found the point held by an officer and twelve men. The party attacked the Germans, killing the officer and four men. The officer's papers, which were captured, included a German code and other documents from which important information was obtained. The scouts retired when German reinforcements appeared.

On the return of the scouts, twenty-five Americans crossed to the German position and resumed the fight. The report on this encounter had not been received up to this forenoon.

Details of the fighting in the Luneville sector on Sunday tell of an encounter between American and German forces in No Man's Land. Three American snipers, dressed in camouflage suits, set out to discover a nest of sharpshooters who had been operating with much success, and had killed one American officer and one private. They penetrated the enemy position, and suddenly encountered a number of Germans, with an officer, standing a few feet away.

Scouts Kill Four.

The Americans quickly opened fire, and killed the officer and three men before they were obliged to withdraw. On their return one man became lost, and three scout officers and four men returned in search of him. They again penetrated the enemy position, where they had another encounter with the Germans, without casualties to the American side. The missing man came in while the second party was looking for him.

When the searchers returned they found that one of their men was missing. He was last seen setting up a machine gun in a shell hole. Two officers went back to look for him, and encountered a German outpost. In the fight that ensued one enemy was killed and his body brought back to the American trenches.

How an American alarm clock kept the whole German line guessing and caused the Germans useless expenditure of large quantities of machine gun and rifle ammunition all one night was re-

DENIES A CHANGE IN PLAN FOR ARMY

Our Troops Will Continue to be Brigaded with Allies, Says Baker.

STORY AMAZES READING

Envoy Sure That Ottawa Report Did Not Come from British War Cabinet.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Officials of the Government and diplomatic representatives of the allied nations were amazed today when they read in the morning newspapers the statement from Ottawa, attributed to "the War Committee of the British Cabinet," announcing that it had been decided not to use the American Army until it had become "a complete, powerful and self-supporting" force. Denials of knowledge of any such new change of policy came quickly from Secretary Baker and Lord Reading, the British Ambassador, both of whom said it was contrary to all the facts, so far as known to them.

There was everything about the statement from Ottawa to give it the semblance of official origin. It discussed the military situation on the western front in a way to indicate knowledge of conditions and the assertions contained were made with a confidence that suggested official sanction. The statement was full of encouragement in that it asserted that the British and French were so confident that they could hold the Germans that they could afford to wait before assuming the offensive until the American forces had assumed large proportions.

Practically everything contained in the statement, however, was contrary to the formal arrangement made by the British, French, and American Governments for the employment of American troops on the western front. It had been agreed that the United States would forward troops to Europe as rapidly as possible, and that these, mainly infantry, would be brigaded with British and French units, that they might be available for use with the least delay. The idea was to have the Americans remain as parts of British or French contingents within the theatre of active warfare until the situation changed, or the arrival of heavy American reinforcements permitted the formation of an army wholly American.

Flatly Contradicted by Baker.

That there had been no change of plans in this respect was made plain by Secretary Baker this afternoon, when he issued this statement:

The statement made in the morning papers purporting to come from Ottawa seems to say that American forces in France will not be used actively for the present, but will be conserved until they constitute a larger and independent American army.

The facts are exactly otherwise. American troops in France are being used actively in battle and in the trenches, and while all of the plans of the War Department look to the development of the American army as such, and to the creation of a distinctly American army, yet the various elements of it now in France are being used freely in the general cause and in such ways as are deemed most effective in accordance with General Pershing's action in placing all of our forces at the disposal of the British and French commanders and of the supreme commander.

The Earl of Reading had previously issued this statement on the subject:

KEMMEL FIRING RESUMED

Area Southwest of Ypres Is Shelled by the Foe All Day.

ALBERT SECTOR ACTIVE

German Artillery Is Also Busy on the Southern Flank of Lys Salient.

AVRE GUNS KEEP POUNDING

French Carry Out a Successful Raid in Lorraine Near Nomeny.

LONDON, May 13.—This has been another day of gunfire along the allied front, without any infantry action of importance.

Tonight's bulletin from Field Marshal Haig tells of artillery activity in the sector north of Kemmel. The day report of the War Office indicates considerable fire on the southern flank of the Lys salient, as well as in the Somme Valley and around Albert.

On the French front the area north and south of the Avre has been the scene of heavy shelling as it has been for many days previous.

Field Marshal Haig's report from British Headquarters in France tonight says:

The hostile artillery developed considerable activity early this morning north of Serre, and has been active during the day on the southern portion of the British front and in the sector north of Kemmel.

There is nothing further of special interest.

The day bulletin of the War Office is as follows:

The hostile artillery was active during the night in the Somme Valley and Albert sectors, also between Locon and the forest of Nieppe, (Flanders front.)

The official statement on aerial operations of Sunday says:

Flying again was impossible Sunday until evening. The visibility then was excellent, and over eight tons of bombs were dropped on targets in the neighborhood of Menin, Armentières, La Bassée, and on the docks at Bruges. In aerial fighting six hostile machines were brought down. One of ours is missing.

During the night fourteen tons of bombs were dropped on the railway stations at Don, Marcoing, Chaulnes, Bapaume, Peronne, and on the docks at Bruges. One of our machines did not return.

The day report of the French War Office says:

Our artillery and the enemy's were active at certain points along the front north and south of the Avre.

In Lorraine a French detachment penetrated the German lines north of Nomeny and brought back twenty prisoners.

In the region of St. Dié a German raid was broken up by our fire.

Elsewhere the night passed in quiet.

The official statement issued by the French War Office tonight reads:

There were no events of importance along the front today, with the exception of bombardments, which became quite lively on both banks of the Avre River.

HINDENBURG IS DEAD, SAY GERMAN PRISONERS

Mackensen Now the Leader, Say Reports Reaching London in Officers' Letters.

LONDON, May 13.—All German prisoners captured in France say that Field Marshal von Hindenburg is dead, letters from British officers on the western front report, according to The Daily Express.

At the same time the name of General von Mackensen is brought into prominence as that of a great man who is to bring the Germans victory.

The Express assumes that the Hindenburg story is circulated to explain the failure of the great offensive.

Rumors that Field Marshal von Mackensen, the conqueror of Rumania, was to be shifted to the western front or had already arrived there to take part in the renewed offensive against the allied lines have been coming from the front with some persistence the last few days. It follows up by several weeks a report that reached Paris from Zurich in early April.

In addition to various vague stories of Mackensen's presence on the west front,

Two Premiers Escape Raider in Pacific; Ship With Australasians Aboard Damaged

A PACIFIC PORT, May 13.—The right honorable William Morris Hughes, Premier of Australia, arrived here today with a party of Australian officials en route to a war conference in London.

Passengers on the vessel said a German raider had attacked and damaged the British transport on which the Premier sailed.

It was asserted that following the attack the damaged transport returned to the port from which she sailed. The Premier and his party caught a train to another port and boarded the steamship which brought them here.

With Premier Hughes are William Ferguson Massey, Prime Minister of New Zealand; Joseph Ward, labor leader and former Premier of New Zealand, and Robert Curran.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—It was said tonight in an official quarter that the report that the steamship on which the Australian Prime Minister crossed the Pacific had been attacked by a German raider was news. There had been no prior report, it was said, that a German raider was in the Pacific.

The Navy Department reported on Oct. 4, 1917, that two German sea raiders armed with machine guns were roving the Pacific. One was said to be the French Lutèce, a small schooner, and the other a motor sloop. Both were said to be manned by the survivors of the crew of the Seeadler, which had been abandoned weeks before on the rocks of Mopeha Island. This news had reached the department in the official report of a naval officer stationed in American Samoa.

According to the same story, some of the army commanders with their positions and strength of forces were:

Von Arnim—Ypres to Bailleul, eight miles, nineteen divisions.

Von Quast—Bailleul to Lens, twenty-five miles, thirty divisions.

Von Below—Lens to Bapaume, twenty miles, fifteen divisions.

TELLS OF REPULSING ALLIES.

German Headquarters Bulletin Reports Local Fighting.

BERLIN, May 13, (via London.)—The official communication from General Headquarters today reads:

In the Kemmel region lively artillery activity continued in connection with local infantry engagements. On other fighting sectors it also revived several times during the evening.

In the Ancre Valley, southwest of Albert, a British partial attack was repulsed. At various points on the front the enemy continued his reconnoitring thrusts. In repulsing them we made some prisoners on several occasions.

The losses to the enemy aerial forces on the German front during April amounted to 15 captive balloons and 271 airplanes, of which 122 fell behind our lines, while others were seen to fall beyond the enemy's positions. In aerial fighting we lost 123 airplanes and 14 captive balloons.

FAVOR FEDERAL PLAN TO SOLVE HOME RULE

British Cabinet, It Is Said, Are Inclined to This Method of Irish Demands.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Tuesday, May 14.—The lobby correspondent of the Daily News says that he learns that the Government, although still divided on the subject of home rule, are more and more inclining to the view that only a federal scheme has any chance of obtaining the adhesion of Ulster. The speech of Barnes, labor member of the War Cabinet, on Sunday, favoring this solution, was intended as a test of Irish opinion on the subject. The correspondent goes on:

"The Cabinet believes strongly that there is a greater swing toward federalism in Parliament and the country than ever before and that the best policy would be to frame an Irish Home Rule bill which is general in its structure and could be fitted into a subsequent act which should establish similar federal parliaments in England, Scotland, and Wales, with the present Imperial Parliament over all to deal with imperial matters.

"They have temporarily, at all events, abandoned the notion of confining federalism to a pious aspiration in the preamble of the Irish bill. The Government believes that at the moment the best course would be to introduce a federal Irish bill and pledge itself to introduce either as its next important act, or in the next session the federal bill for the rest of the kingdom so that the Irish Unionists might commend the Home Rule bill to the Ulstermen as part of an imperial scheme."

TOOK GERMAN GIRLS' FINERY

LONDON, April 24—(Correspondence of Associated Press.)—A tale of a cruel hoax on young girls in a German village is related by the Kieler Zeitung.

Ihringshausen maidens, promised a Sunday afternoon dance in the town hall, dressed themselves in their best, bringing out from hiding places cherished bits of finery. They trooped to the hall and for two hours waited in vain for partners and music.

Then the Burgomaster arrived, closed the doors and ordered each girl to sign her name to an official paper. That done, he curtly informed them that the dance would not take place. The next day policemen visited the girls' homes and confiscated their ribbons and laces.

EVADES REQUEST TO END HOSTILITIES

German Commander in Ukraine Replies to Message of Russian Soviet Government.

WANTS BLACK SEA FLEET

Says All Its Ships Must Return to Sebastopol and Be Interned Before Attacks Cease.

MOSCOW, May 13, (British Admiralty, per Wireless Press.)—The Commander in Chief of the German troops in the East, replying to the Russian request for the cessation of hostilities on the Ukrainian front, says that German troops, in accordance with the terms of the Brest-Litovsk treaty, have cleared the Ukraine of Red Guards, and that it should be possible to do so everywhere along the Ukrainian land frontier.

The Commander in Chief said he could only agree to the cessation of naval operations against the Black Sea fleet, provided all ships returned to Sebastopol and were retained there. Then the port of Novorossevsk would be opened free to navigation. He claimed that the Black Sea fleet more than once had participated in the fighting against German troops in the Ukraine.

AMSTERDAM, May 13.—The great mass of the population at Kiev is maintaining a cool attitude toward the new Ukrainian Government, with some show of hostility, according to the Berlin Tageblatt. Complete order prevails, however, the newspaper declares.

The arrival of three Russian peace delegates at Kiev is announced by the Tageblatt.

IMPERIAL RUSSIANS IN HANDS OF GERMANS

Former Dowager Empress and Grand Dukes Nicholas and Alexander Held at Kiev.

AMSTERDAM, May 13.—The Ukrainian Press Bureau has received information from Odessa according to which the former Dowager Empress Maria Feodorovona and Grand Dukes Nicholas Nicholaievitch and Alexander Nicholaievitch (Michaelovitch?), who had been living at Dulbar, near Altodor, in the Crimea, are in the hands of the Germans.

Special dispatches from Moscow, published last Saturday, reported that the Dowager Empress had arrived at Kiev, the Ukrainian capital. This news was coupled with the statements that General Skoropadski, the new Ukrainian Dictator, had been one of the pages of the former Empress, and that Grand Duke Dmitri Pavlovitch, who also was reported to be in Kiev, had taken a prominent part in the coup d'état by which the Ukrainian Rada was overthrown and a Dictatorship established.

The ex-Dowager Empress had been living in the Crimea in straitened circumstances since the Russian revolution.

Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch is the former Commander in Chief of the Russian armies and is regarded as the greatest of Russia's military leaders. He joined in the general abdication of the Romanoffs and since is believed to have been living in retirement on his estate in the Crimea, although there have been various reports connecting him with royalist plots.

Little has been heard of Grand Duke Alexander Michaelovitch since the abdication last year. It is probable, however, that he has been living continuously in the Crimea. He is a brother-in-law of the former Emperor.

EX-CZAR'S SON AT TOBOLSK.

80,000 Rubles Taken from His Father at Ekaterinburg.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, May 10, (Dispatch to The London Times.)—The Soviet authorities confirm the fact that Nicholas Romanoff, the ex-Emperor, and his wife and one daughter have been transferred from Tobolsk to Ekaterinburg, in the centre of the Urals, in consequence of the discovery of a conspiracy among the peasantry to assist him to escape. His son, Alexis, remains at Tobolsk for the present on account of ill-health.

The ex-Czar is now lodged in a small private house at Ekaterinburg with one or two attendants only. No strangers are allowed to approach him. He complains that lately the people in charge of his safety have been rude and meddlesome.

Sverdloff, one of the People's Commissaries, declares that Nicholas Romanoff will have to reconcile himself to the fact that he is a prisoner of the Soviet and that the question of his ultimate fate will soon be brought up for decision. Search has been made among his belongings and 60,000 rubles were found and confiscated. It is supposed this money was for securing the good will and assistance of the local peasantry.

LITHUANIANS ANTI-GERMAN.

Movement for a Monarch Chosen Outside Belligerent Dynasties.

AMSTERDAM, May 13.—Strong opposition is developing among the Lithuanians against Lithuania becoming a German "semi-Federal" State, without the rights of a Federal State, according to the Berlin Socialist newspaper Vorwärts.

This opposition, the newspaper declares, demands an entirely independent Lithuania, under a monarch chosen outside the belligerent dynasties.

FINNISH FLAG OVER SVEABORG.

Fortress in Helsingfors Harbor Renamed Huomenlinna.

HELSINGFORS, Finland, May 13, (Associated Press.)—The Finnish flag today was raised with solemn ceremonies over the fortress of Sveaborg, in Helsingfors harbor, where, 110 years ago, it made way for the Russian banner. The fortress was renamed Huomenlinna, the Finnish word meaning Finland's Fortress.

Reports of the resumption of diplomatic relations between Finland and Russia are officially denied. It is declared there can be no question of the resumption of relations so long as Russian warships remain in Finnish waters, while refuge is accorded to Finnish rebels and their booty in Petrograd, nor if the authorities of East Karelia continue to support enemy actions against Finland.

SEMENEFF ACTIVE AGAIN.

Cossack General Advancing Along the Transsiberian Railroad.

PEKING, May 9, (Associated Press.)—Official announcement has been made at Harbin that General Semenoff, leader of the movement in Siberia against the Bolsheviki, has advanced along the Transsiberian Railway as far as Adrianovsk, west of the Onon River, having restored the bridge across the river which the Bolsheviki destroyed.

In a proclamation General Semenoff has assured the people of Transbaikalia that his movement is not counter-revolutionary, but is intended to restore lawful freedom. Many Russian soldiers from Siberia are reported to be joining General Semenoff.

KAISER TO KING LUDWIG.

Says He Believes with Him That German Cause Will Triumph.

AMSTERDAM, May 13.—Replying to a message of congratulations from King Ludwig of Bavaria on the conclusion of peace with Rumania, Emperor William has sent the following telegram:

I know I am at one with you in firm confidence that the Almighty will lead our good cause to victory. May God grant that our brave and faithful people will reap the fruits of their present sacrifice in long and happy years of peace.

The War Situation

BY THE MILITARY EXPERT OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

After a long period of hibernation, due to the heavy snows of a late Winter, the Italian front is again beginning to show signs of activity. Up to the present time it does not appear that anything approaching a major attack is contemplated by either side. In the mountain districts the snows have not sufficiently melted to permit such a movement, while the defenses of the Piave front seem to forbid it on the part of the Austro-Hungarians.

The Italians have begun the Spring campaign, it is to be noted, and not the Austrians. The attacks have, of course, been purely local, and for the time being they must continue so. The general character of the country is now pretty well understood, and it is apparent that the operations in the mountains must be limited in their scope to individual objectives until a sufficient advance has been effected to enable an attack against the flanks of other positions, when a larger retirement might be forced. When the campaign of last year ended the Italian line was left along the western bank of the Piave as far north as Alana, at which place it turned westward across the mountains to the valley of the Adige River. The Austrians had occupied the Asiago Plateau, and in doing so had pushed the Italians southward almost to the plain of Northern Italy.

Monte Corno, where the first engagement of the year was fought, is still snow covered, so that it may well be some time yet before the ground offers any possibility of continued action. In this first of the year's actions the honors rest with the Italians, who have seized the crest of the mountain, with a number of its defenders.

Military writers are beginning to look for a campaign against the Italians and to speculate as to where it will fall and what will be the result. Whether, indeed, there will be such an offensive is a question. The Austrians do not seem to be in any way anxious to begin fighting again. They have been quiet for a long time, and, with food and political conditions at home in their present situation, appear to be satisfied to let the Germans do the fighting in another field. Germany, of course, will endeavor to force Austria's hand and drive her to undertake an offensive. But whether she can be spurred into so doing is very doubtful. It will, moreover, be a dangerous situation to contend with. Austria today is in an explosive state. She is tied hand and foot to Germany, and the process of economic strangulation is still going on. Germany owns her, body and soul. But starvation is a tremendous lever, and unless some measures can be taken to alleviate the food situation, we may see an Austrian Bolsheviki spring up as did the Russian.

Germany has, as was stated a few days ago, no men to spare for a campaign against Italy. A success on the southern allied flank will not satisfy the craving for victory, and it is victory that is occupying all of Germany's thoughts today. The announced intention is to destroy the British army and to drive on to Paris. Any great diversion from this plan will open the way to criticism. Therefore, if any movement takes place in Italy at all it will have to be with Austrians alone. Austria has never been particularly successful in fighting Italy or any one else. She has not suffered an attack in which sooner or later she did not have to call for help. Italy, indeed, feels so secure from disaster at the hands of the Austrians that she has, it has been announced, already sent to the front in France several thousand men. The situation in Italy, therefore, is not one which appears to be causing much worry.

On the western front heavy artillery actions are still in order. The only infantry action has been a local attack by the French in the north, about a mile and a half north of Kemmel. Here the French have seized a spur which juts out toward the west from the main tongue which holds the village of Vierstraat. This spur is known as Hill 44. This attack brings a section of the French line on a front of about three-quarters of a mile out of the plain of Flandere and establishes it upon the high ground, which is, however, only about fifty feet above the plain. It makes the French position a little more secure, although the change is slight. Except for this minor development the situation remains unchanged.

KAISERS DRAWING UP NEW TEUTON ALLIANCE

"Complete Accord" on Questions of the Present and Future, Berlin Announces.

BERLIN, May 13, (via London.)—The chief features of an agreement to strengthen the alliance between Germany and Austria-Hungary have been laid down, says an official statement issued here today in regard to the visit of Emperor Charles to German Great Headquarters. The statement follows:

"Emperor Charles visited Emperor William at Great Headquarters on Sunday. In addition to his personal suite, the Emperor was accompanied by Foreign Minister Burian, Field Marshal von Arz, Chief of the General Staff, and Prince Hohenlohe, Austrian Ambassador at Berlin. Germany was represented by Chancelor von Hertling, Field Marshal von Hindenburg, General von Ludendorff, Foreign Secretary von Kühlmann, and Coun von Wedel, Ambassador at Vienna.

"A cordial discussion took place, and all the fundamental political, economic, and military questions affecting the present and future relations of the two monarchies were thoroughly discussed. There was complete accord on all these questions, tending to deepen the existing alliance. The guiding lines of the contemplated contractual agreements already exist in principle."

AMSTERDAM, May 13.—Resolutions in favor of the extension of Austria's alliance with Germany were passed at a congress of Germans in the Austrian Tyrol, says a dispatch from Sterzing, Austria, to the Vossische Zeitung of Berlin. The resolutions urge a closer military and economic union and the establishment in Austria of German State institutions and constitutional law.

A Vienna dispatch to the Frankfurter Zeitung, quoted in a Zurich dispatch on Sunday, said that a military and custome union of Germany and Austria-Hungary had been contemplated, although the outcome was considered uncertain owing to the political chaos prevailing in Austria.

SLAVS PUT HOPE IN WILSON.

"Most Popular Man" Among the Subject Austrian Nationalities.

Copyright, 1918, by The New York Times Company.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, May 13.—"President Wilson is the most popular man." This statement would not surprise any one if it came from one of the allied countries, but instead it is the report coming from Austria, where all the oppressed nationalities longing for freedom see in the triumph of the Wilson principles the greatest hope for their liberation.

Throughout Bohemia all parties hope to succeed with the assistance of Wilson in proclaiming their country an independent republic. The Serbians and Montenegrins and Croats believe that Wilson alone has the power to group them together in a free Slav State, ruled according to the desires of the people.

These feelings render the position of the Austrian Government most difficult, and impose the necessity of finding a way to bring the war to an end.

PERISHING IN VIENNA STREETS.

Many Die from Exhaustion—Breadless Days Now Proposed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 13.—A dispatch to The Times from Milan says that two Italian nurses who were made prisoner by the Austrians in a hospital near Gradisca while the October retreat was in progress have been permitted to return to Italy. They say that present conditions in Vienna are almost insupportable. Deaths from exhaustion continually occur in the streets and a physician told them that 2,000 persons were buried daily in the principal cemetery.

LONDON, May 13.—The Austrian Food Controller is considering the introduction of one breadless day a week, according to a dispatch from Geneva to The Daily News. Vienna newspapers say the Government is forced to take this action owing to the rapid diminution of the flour supply and the small prospects of obtaining more wheat before the next harvest.

CZECH LEGISLATORS DEMAND INDEPENDENCE

Members of Austrian House of Lords Protest Against Exploitation of Bohemia.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—A diplomatic dispatch from Geneva today says that the Vienna papers publish a declaration by the Czech members of the Austrian House of Lords in which an independent State is demanded. The document protests against what it calls the unexampled attacks of Count Czernin against the Czech nation, and concludes:

"We protest against the aims and plans of the Government, which tend to resolve in an anti-constitutional and one-sided manner the national questions of the Kingdom of Bohemia in accordance with the desires and to the advantage of a single nation. We seriously warn the Government against action, for the very reason of the gravity of the period which we are traversing."

half a pound weekly. Since Christmas we have had one egg each. That was on Easter Day, and there were occasionally small rations of farinaceous foods on the cards. When we reached Holland the children went from shop window to shop window in ecstasy, gazing at chocolates, cakes, cheese, and milk. Naturally, almost anything can be obtained by graft."

Children Well, Though Thin.

A remarkable fact is that these children look comparatively healthy, and, although somewhat emaciated, are able to enjoy life, which proves that people can and will continue to exist under these conditions.

Another remarkable fact is that, in spite of serious privations, the Germans have learned to do without things in order to further future trade relations abroad. This is obvious from the many articles exported to Holland which are unobtainable in Germany, a striking instance being in tobacco and cigarettes. While Germans are smoking cigars and cigarettes made of leaves and hay, at double the former prices, and often wait in queues from 10 o'clock at night until the following midday to obtain a few cigars, the Dutch market is flooded with Rumanian and Turkish cigarettes exported by German firms.

Germans have continued to export manufactured articles to Holland and have in many instances already captured the English market here.

In Germany, war with Holland is spoken of as inevitable, and a few weeks ago every one believed that the crucial moment had arrived. German sentries on the Dutch frontier stated that German troops were about to march through Holland.

Dropping Many Bombs On Ostend and Zeebrugge

LONDON, May 13.—The Admiralty announces that during the period May 6-12, inclusive, air force contingents working from Dunkirk carried out successful bombing operations against the Ostend docks and seaplane base, the Zeebrugge mole and lock gates and enemy shipping in the vicinity.

"Several direct hits were obtained on the sheds on Zeebrugge mole, and a large shed at the seaplane base was completely burned up," the statement continues. "In the course of the offensive petrole elx enemy machines were destroyed and two others were driven down out of control. One of ours is missing.

"On May 10 one of our seaplanes in the North Sea sighted a Zeppelin on patrol, and an indecisive action lasting half an hour was terminated by the Zeppelin retreating to its base."

READY TO LET JAPAN ACT.

London Paper Says She May Take Resolute Part in the War.

LONDON, May 13.—The interchange of messages between Baron Goto, the new Japanese Foreign Minister, and the British Foreign Office, is seen by the Daily Telegraph as a happy omen, emphasizing the value and reality of the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

"It is well," the paper says, "that we should be reminded from time to time of the mutual obligations between London and Tokio, obligations which have been fulfilled punctiliously on both sides and recognized fully by the leading statesmen of both countries as a peculiarly binding force. The time may soon come, perhaps it already has arrived, when Japan may be called upon to play a strong and resolute part in the war. In such a contingency she must be assured of our sympathy if she takes whatever she deems to be the proper steps for protecting allied interests in the Far East.

"Japan has her own responsibilities in this matter and can hardly see without alarm the spread of Bolsheviem to Vladivostok and Manchuria. To give a chance for the resurrection of Russia by holding the anarchial factors in check is a clear and statesmanlike policy for the Entente Powers who sympathize with Russia.

"What country obviously is marked out for energetic action in this crusade? It can only be Japan, which, by its position in the Pacific and its proximity to Siberia, is fitted peculiarly to render efficient and prompt service, even so far as to Irkutsk in the west.

"It is by no means true to say that Japan in whatever steps she may think necessary to take in reference to the Siberian menace will be actuated solely by utilitarian aims. She sees clearly enough that peace in the eastern world depends largely upon her championship of a crusade for freedom and right against the insidious diplomacy and brutal domination of Germany.

British War Cabinet to the effect that the Allies are so confident that, having been given the choice of a small immediate American army for defense, or waiting till they are reinforced by a complete, powerful, self-supporting American army, they have chosen the latter, is diametrically opposed to all information received by me from the British War Cabinet and to all the requests which I have been asked by them to make to the United States Administration.

I am quite in the dark as to the origin of the statement. At present all I can say is that I am convinced that the document has not been issued with the knowledge of the Prime Minister or the British War Cabinet.

Cannot Guess Source of Story.

There were several suggestions as to the possible origin of the Ottawa statement, but these were conjectural. It was known in some quarters that the allied military representatives had been considering the advisability of using the brigaded British-American and French-American troops as little as possible until their services were imperatively needed, the idea being that if their employment could be deferred, a sufficient force of Americans would have arrived in Europe to justify the formation of an American army under its own commanders. This gave rise to the surmise that a decision might have been reached that was embodied in the Ottawa announcement. But all the evidence was to the contrary.

Officers of the United States Army would be gratified if the situation permitted our forces to fight as a separate unit, but all their information indicated that no change of plan was contemplated.

There is a disposition in some places to attribute the statement to unintentional error.

There has been no secret of the plan by which American troops were to be brigaded with British and French units. When the British and French Governments informed this Government that troops were needed, President Wilson was responsive, and it was arranged that all the shipping available should be used to transport American soldiers to Europe. Since then splendid transportation results have been achieved, so that Secretary Baker was able to announce last week that his prediction of January that 500,000 American troops would be in Europe early in 1918 had been realized.

The results justify the hope that Secretary Baker's statement before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs early in the year, that if shipping conditions permitted 1,500,000 American troops would be in Europe by the end of 1918, may be fulfilled.

Under the plan of operation the American soldiers are traveling with as little equipment as possible. This leaves much hold space in ships for food and war material, which must be forwarded in enormous quantities to the Allied countries and their forces in the field. The British Government desired that the American troops should travel "light," and offered even to furnish rifles and all war material so as to conserve cargo space for other uses, but it is understood that the Americans are carrying their own small arms, as well as the field equipment ordinarily supplied to soldiers on expeditionary service.

The arrangement has a practical value outside of the saving of cargo space. With American forces arriving in England and France in increasing numbers, the burden of supplying the American Army on overseas service becomes heavier. Largely increased quantities of food will be required, and with the British and French Governments calling on this country to augment its food shipments to the Allied countries the additional task would seriously tax the already overburdened shipping capacity of available vessels. But the British and French have assured the United States that they will take care of the American troops, and the Washington Government need not worry itself over this phase of the supply problem. The American troops, brigaded with British and French units, will be fed, equipped and otherwise supplied by the British and French Governments as long as they remain with their European comrades.

Expect Explanation from London.

WASHINGTON, May 13, (Associated Press.)—Some American officials were inclined tonight to characterize the report from London via Ottawa, that American troops would not be used until a complete and powerful American army had been developed in France as an echo of the political controversy precipitated in England by the General Maurice incident. They could see no other explanation, since the statement attributed to the "War Committee" of the British War Cabinet was promptly repudiated by Lord Reading, the British Ambassador here, and later declared by Secretary Baker to be at variance with the facts as known here.

"I ought to have done this long ago" said a naval officer, "and saved myself some bad investments, for a navy man hasn't much chance to get business experience." (This is true of army men also).

He was expecting to leave for extended foreign service some months ago, and turned all his property over to us in a "living" trust—that is, one in effect during his lifetime.

We relieve him entirely of the care of his property, and credit the income to his account, on which he can draw drafts from any part of the world.

Our officers will be glad to talk with you either about "living" trusts, or trusts under will.

AUSTRIAN SAILORS A WEEK IN REVOLT

February Mutiny at Cattaro Ended Only by Granting Concessions.

RED FLAG WAS HOISTED

Crews of Six Cruisers Demanded Immediate Peace—Disorders at Pola Less Serious.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 13.—The London Times correspondent with the Italian Army says that news is trickling through to Italy from time to time about the great mutiny in the Austrian fleet early in February, and it is possible now to give a fairly accurate idea of what happened. The mutiny began at Pola, but, as it broke out almost simultaneously at Cattaro, it looks as if there had been collusion between the two ports. It was among the arsenal workmen that the rising began at Pola. They demanded the abolition of various disciplinary measures and punishments inflicted both on shipboard and ashore. The movement soon spread to the ships in the harbor. The crews left their posts and thronged the decks, shouting, hurrahing, and acting as they pleased. Their officers were powerless, but there seems to have been no fighting between them and the men.

The naval authorities parleyed with the men for a week and finally all the sailors' and workmen's demands were granted.

At Cattaro the mutiny took a more serious turn. Six cruisers and several destroyers hoisted the red flag. The German and Magyar elements in some crews held aloof, and there were encounters between them and the mutineers, the guns of one cruiser being turned on another, and some mutineers being killed. However, the mutineers got the upper hand after three days and became masters of the port. The officers were seized, the Admiral commanding being taken by the sailors from his flagship to confinement in a vessel in the harbor, where he received apparently no very gentle treatment.

The mutineers gave all orders afloat or ashore. These were printed and signed "The Committee of the Crews." The wireless apparatus was seized and the sailors' committee thus communicated to Vienna its demands, among which that for the immediate conclusion of peace was prominent.

Alarm was caused by these measures, and conciliatory but noncommittal replies were sent. After many prolonged discussions the authorities in Vienna decided to dispatch to Cattaro a division of the fleet, under a German-speaking Austrian Admiral, upon which it was thought that reliance might be placed. When this appeared before Cattaro, the position was critical, as murmurings had broken out in the new division.

The situation was saved by the Teutonic element in one of the revolting cruisers in the harbor getting free and hauling down the red flag. Negotiations were opened on an equal footing between the Admiral and the mutineers, and finally the latter consented to surrender the vessels on receiving written guarantees that no action would be taken against any man, and that a number of the grievances would be settled. The Cattaro fleet then returned to its allegiance after having been in open revolt for eight days.

In consequence of the mutiny Emperor Charles cashiered a number of high officers on the ground that it was their slackness that had permitted the outbreak. About thirty officers are believed to have been retired. The fleet has been put under command of a notoriously severe and much disliked Admiral. Efforts were made later to revoke the amnesty to the mutineers, and they have been severely punished, supposedly for subsequent offenses; but nothing has been done publicly, as most of Austria's sailors belong to the oppressed races.

There is no doubt that the ferment continues in the fleet, as well as in the army.

BEAT AUSTRIANS BACK FROM MONTE CORNO

Italians Hold Their Gains, Inflicting Heavy Losses Upon Their Assailants.

WARNS REICHSTAG OF BARS TO TRADE

World Distrusts Germany Because of Her Political System, Says von Schulze.

URGES INTERNAL REFORMS

Colonies and Commercial Treaties Essential, He Asserts—Stein Fears Economic War.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 13.—The London Times publishes extracts from a speech made by Professor von Schulze-Gaevernitz, a well-known economist, in last week's Reichstag debate on the organization of a German trade offensive after the war. Among other things the Professor said:

"In order to raise the value of our securities, in order to replenish our stock of raw materials, we must, since we can expect no considerable influx of foreign loans, promote our export trade. Immediately after the war we shall have to re-establish our export capacity on higher level than before the war, since we shall more then ever need imports.

"First and foremost, the export of goods of high value must be promoted. The task of promoting exports is confronted with the menace of serious impediments. I do not attach tragic importance to the threatened economic war after the war. The hunger for goods will overcome every other consideration. Goods will be bought wherever they are to be found.

Wants Colonies for Trade.

"A more serious danger, in my opinion, is the spirit of economic nationalism that has got abroad, especially in England, but graver still, in view of the universal demand, is the universal scarcity of raw materials. The Australian zinc output has been bespoken by England for many years to come. Palm kernel oil, too, has been made more difficult for us to obtain.

"We have no choice, therefore, but to secure for ourselves considerable colonies, capable of supplying us with raw materials. As an additional expedient we should conclude treaties providing for a supply of raw materials on the model of the peace treaties with Rumania and the Ukraine."

Urges Favored Nation Treaties.

In von Schulze-Gaevernitz's opinion, the surest method of working up a new world connection is by means of most favored nation clauses, imposed as in the treaty of Frankfort with France in 1871. Annexations may or may not be desirable, but from the point of view of Germany's future in the world, he holds it is absolutely essential that no nation should have a preference over any other.

"That," he said," "is the most important war aim, not only for Germany, but for all the nations interested in world economy—an equal place in the sun for everybody. But if Germany seeks equality of treatment, she must abandon the practice of dumping, which was so bitterly resented abroad. It should be to our own interest if we took account of these sentiments and declared our readiness to organize an international authority that would be charged with securing the honest observance of the most favored nation rule.

"If today we declare for such a system, we thereby encourage, as a glance at the foreign labor press shows, all those abroad who are in economic bondage and whose hostility to the policy of exclusion makes them, in the ultimate resort, friends of peace. If we pursue this policy, then the triple tariff system goes by the board and with it the possibility of conciliating our allies by means of special preferences, but that is to our interest.

"We cannot ignore the fact that our enemies embrace nearly the whole world. We cannot shut ourselves off. The whole world must be told that Germany does not claim any trade preferences in Turkey and that all she seeks there is the maintenance of her own position and equal rights for all nations."

World Distrust of Germany.

In conclusion, the Professor drew the following political moral of the times:

"In formulating these wishes we must also inspire ourselves with the spirit from which springs the demand for the equal franchise, for behind every exchange of goods lie moral imponderabilia. No treaty of peace can guard us against the rejection of our wares, and this without any breach of a formal stipulation regarding equal rights. The cultivation of sentiment is essential for the reconstruction of world economy.

"We Germans can best promote the world economic sentiment that we need by identifying our political activity more prominently with the progressive democratization of the classes which are less susceptible to international hatred. This we can surely achieve by means of the so-called internal readjustment which is or ought now to be proceeding in Prussia.

"Nothing has so estranged the world from us as our system of government hitherto. Every business man who has lived abroad has learned for himself that in this system of Government lie rooted the lack of sympathy and the mistrust which have confronted the German trader everywhere. There can be no doubt that the readjustment now in progress, which ought to spread from Prussia over the whole German Empire, possesses great economic importance, and that it is bound to make it easier for the German trader and for German goods to get back again into the world."

Stein Looks to Trade War.

Herr von Stein, Secretary of the Bureau of Economics, in replying, said that he did not share von Schulze-Gaevernitz's view that the danger of an economic war need not be taken seriously.

"We must not treat this matter too lightly," he said. "We must reckon with the possibility, with the large probability that the war in the economic field will continue without regard for treaties of peace. Our enemies will not again live in peace and friendship with us.

"I do not regard our enemies as old women but as men, and as they have threatened us with an economic war they will want to go through with it. * * * After the war we shall have to collect our whole strength in order to maintain our position, and the best policy to this end is to promote production."

REFORM BILL LOSES GROUND.

Decisive Defeat on Third Reading in Prussian Diet Forecast.

STOCKHOLM, May 13.—The Berlin correspondent of the Tidningen reports that the Prussian Franchise Reform measures are likely to be rejected on their third reading by an increased majority.

The Berlin Clerical organ Germania says that the minority section of the Clericals is for an equal franchise in principle and will vote for it even without the "guarantees" which the opponents of the measure have endeavored to impose on the reforms. The great majority of the party, however, will vote in the negative.

The third reading begins today and a vote probably will be taken on Tuesday.

ALLIANCE CEMENTED BY TROOPS' PARADE

British Press Praises Americans and Declares America and England Are Firmly United.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 13.—The Daily Telegraph says:

"The march through London of American troops, with the compliments paid to King George on the one hand and the splendidly enthusiastic welcome given to the troops by the people of London on the other, signalizes a final wiping out of old prejudices, an extinction of a lingering memory of old quarrels, a reunion of hearts among English-speaking peoples in the service of the most just and most compelling cause that ever ennobled the pursuit of victory. Nothing can ever be the same again as between the British peoples and the great nation which owns common ancestry, tradition, and speech with them. For the first time they feel and think and act alike and offer together a supreme sacrifice. It is indeed a great moment in history which sees the flag of Washington, borne through London by armed defenders of the honor of the United States in token of friendship and alliance."

The Times says:

"The Kaiser and his advisers brought together English-speaking peoples more closely and more rapidly than the fondest dreamers after more intimate relations between them had dared to hope. That, as we ventured to point out when the President called upon Congress to declare that Germany had made war upon the Republic, is an immense event in the history of the Old World and of the New—the greatest that has happened, except the war itself, since the French Revolution. It is having and will have complex and far-reaching consequences both for the British Empire and for the United States in many spheres of thought and of activity. Its military results upon the great conflict between militarism and democracy promise to turn the scale decisively when once the Republic has placed her armies in the field."

The Morning Post says:

"No one could see those troops march by without realizing that a new world had indeed been called in to redress the balance of the old and that Germany never made a more profound or more fatal miscalculation than when she held the power of America cheap. The German war staff would be happy indeed if they could look forward to the replenishing of their armies with such fine and abundant material. The appearance of this contingent from America has the fateful significance of the entry of Fortinbras and his army in the last act of 'Hamlet.' In the tread of these men was to be heard the footfall of fate."

LONDON, May 13.—The American "invasion of London" is featured by the morning newspapers today as it was on Sunday. The most critical military experts are loud in their praise of the fine bearing of the American troops who paraded through the British capital Saturday. One writer sums up the general opinion in this way:

"They have the cut of an infernally adequate lot of fighters. I would rather lead them than tackle them."

Newspaper articles are illustrated with photographs of different stages of the march, an important place being given to the scene outside Buckingham Palace with King George standing beside Colonel Whitman and saluting the American flag.

"The lesson for England and America is plain," says The Times, "and there is abundant proof that both understand it. We have to stick it out and the Americans have to hurry up, and they are hurrying up splendidly.

"Not one peace note has been heard in Congress. The only criticisms breathed against the Government consist of occasional complaint that it does not get on fast enough with the war. That is the right temper for both sides of the Atlantic."

The Manchester Guardian says:

"We regard the men of the American regiment which marched through London on Saturday with intimate sympathy, for they are not only soldiers of an ally, but citizen soldiers like our own 'improvised' army, called to meet an unparalleled ordeal. We know well the spirit in which they will meet it and that in all those moral and intellectual qualities on which final victory depends they will be as formidable an army as any in the field.

"We see endless cause for thanks in the full co-operation of America in the war, for America can exert enormous influence for good in the making both of war and of peace. In both fields her position and reasons for intervention enable her to speak with impartiality and detachment of which few of her allies can boast."

ACTORS' STRIKE ENDS PLAY.

"The Myatery of Life's" Run Is Abruptly Closed at the Lexington.

"The Mystery of Life," the play by the Rev. J. F. X. O'Conor, S. J., suddenly terminated its run at the Lexington Theatre, Lexington Avenue and Fifty-first Street, last night, when the principals and stage hands refused to raise the curtain, because, they said, the management of the play had failed to pay their salaries, after several weeks of rehearsals and a week of presentation. The play had its première on May 6. Father O'Conor, author and scholar and a member of the Jesuit Order, which does not permit his engaging in private enterprise for personal financial return, did not appear at the theatre last night.

It was learned that he had attended the funeral of his brother, Daniel J. O'Conor, one of the founders of the Catholic Club, who died last Friday. George A. Lawrence, stage director of the play, paid out the week's receipts in small advances to the actors and stage hands, but when Father O'Conor did not appear they refused to start the performance. H. Cushion, house manager of the Lexington, appeared on the stage and announced that the audience could have its money back at the box office.

Name British Shipping Envoy.

Sir Connop Guthrie has been appointed Special Representative of the British Ministry of Shipping in the United States, it was announced yesterday, and the work heretofore done by him will be undertaken by T. Ashley Sparks, Director in this country of the Cunard Steamship Company. The increase in the volume of work connected with British shipping in this country and the association of Sir Connop Guthrie with the Shipping Control Committee had made necessary a rearrangement of the executive management of the British Ministry of Shipping Organization in New York.

LOSS OF U-BOATS EXCEEDS OUTPUT

Germany Knows Their Campaign Is Declining, Says French Minister of Marine.

FALSE CLAIMS BY BERLIN

Total of the Allied Tonnage Sunk in Five Months Is Less Than Half That Alleged.

PARIS, May 11.—The effectiveness of the German submarine campaign is declining. The German Government was aware of this fact, declared Georges Leygues, Minister of Marine, before the Naval Committee of the Chamber of Deputies today, but had made the greatest efforts to conceal it. He said the situation was most favorable and that the number of submarines sunk in the first three months of 1918 through allied measures was greater than the number built by the enemy.

Minister Leygues referred to the statement made in the Reichstag on April 17 by Vice Admiral von Capelle, German Minister of Marine, in which he said 600,000 tons of allied shipping were sunk monthly. This figure, the Minister said, was incorrect. It was reached and passed in April, May, and June of 1917. In July it declined and in November it fell below 400,000, and since had diminished continuously.

The Minister gave the following comparative table of the tonnage alleged by Germany to have been destroyed and the tonnage actually lost in the last five months:

	Alleged by Germany. Tons.	Actual Losses. Tons.
December	702,000	368,277
January	622,000	302,459
February	689,000	332,522
March	680,000	358,860
April	600,000	268,704
Totals	3,303,000	1,648,822

M. Leygues said that in February, March, and April 3,723 French steamers and 788 French sailing vessels passed through the danger zone, where a few months ago losses by torpedoing had been very heavy. Not a single ship was sunk.

More U-Boats Destroyed.

On the other hand, he said, the number of submarines destroyed had increased progressively since January in such proportion that the effectiveness of enemy squadrons could not be maintained at the minimum required by the regulations.

The number of enemy U-boats destroyed in January, February, and March was far greater in each month than the number constructed in the same month. In February and April the number of submarines destroyed was three fewer than the total destroyed in the previous three months.

These results, the Minister declared, were due to the methodical character of the war against submarines; to the close co-ordination of the allied navies; to the intrepidity and spirit animating the officers and crews of naval and aerial squadrons, and to the intensification of the use of old methods and the employment of new ones.

"The situation is most favorable," the Minister continued," but it does not authorize the slackening of effort. Rather, it is necessary to redouble it, as the enemy has put new submersibles into service and is trying a fresh offensive, in which he plays for his last stake.

"The seafront has no communiqué. The country does not know the terrible fate there when great events occur. Yet it is there that there is being played one of the parts which has the greatest influence on the duration and issue of the war. The country knows that mastery of the sea is the certain gauge of victory. It should know also that the mastery belongs to the Allies, who have won it and who keep it, thanks to the heroism of the sailors, who are worthy of their soldier brothers."

The Minister then gave details of the successful British operations against the German submarine bases at Zeebrugge and Ostend.

New U-Boat Cruisers.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Realizing that America and the Allies have gained the mastery over the present type of submarine, Germany now is said to be planning a new series of big U-boat cruisers, with which she hopes again to assume the advantage in her unrestricted under-water warfare.

Announcement of the new German scheme is made by Georges Leygues, the French Minister of Marine, in an interview received here today in an official dispatch from France. No details regarding the new U-boats were given by M. Leygues, but from information from other sources it appears that the cruiser submarines will be heavily armed and armored and will be designed especially to meet the menace of the torpedo boat destroyers, which have proved so effective in hunting down the smaller submarines now in operation.

M. Leygues declared that the Allies were ready to meet Germany's new efforts and that they would not rest upon the "fine results obtained" in the past.

"We shall not stop," he said, "until we have cleaned up the sea as one cleans up a trench."

Just how effective had been the war against the U-boats was shown by figures on destruction of allied shipping given to the Naval Committee of the French Chamber of Deputies on Saturday by Minister Leygues. They reveal that sinking of merchantmen has fallen off to the point where new construction is exceeding the destruction, even now before American yards are in full swing on the great building program mapped out by the Shipping Board.

Decrease in Sinkings.

The monthly average of destruction this year, as given by M. Leygues, is 315,000, compared with more than 500,000 tons monthly in 1917. In April of last year, the first month of Germany's unrestricted submarine warfare, the tonnage sunk was 871,000. In April of this year it had dwindled to about 268,000.

The total of allied shipping destroyed in the first four months of 1918 was placed by Minister Leygues at 1,262,345 tons. Even if the submarines are able to maintain this rate, which officials doubt, the year's total would be something like 3,700,000 tons, or less than the estimated amount of tonnage which the Shipping Board believes America will produce in the year.

Adding to American production the output in Great Britain, France, and Japan, the Allies would gain for the year something like 2,000,000 tons, not counting 1,000,000 or more tons of chartered Japanese and Norwegian ships and requisitioned Dutch vessels.

Officials emphasize the fact that these figures, while encouraging, do not furnish the margin of safety that is necessary, and there will be no relaxing of building efforts in any of the allied countries or in America. England's output thus far this year has not come up to expectations and the American yards have not turned out the tonnage anticipated, because of freight congestion and other causes, and renewed efforts are being made to make up these deficiencies.

ACCLAIM CO-OPERATION OF THE SISTER NAVIES

Daniels and Geddes Exchange Congratulations—Bayly's Tribute to Our Sailors.

LONDON, May 13.—Letters exchanged between Josephus Daniels, American Secretary of the Navy, and Sir Eric Geddes, First Lord of the British Admiralty, were made public today by the Admiralty. Secretary Daniels wrote:

"Your reference to the splendid spirit of co-operation between the navies of our countries and your warm praise of the officers and men of our navy have been most grateful to me and to all Americans. The brightest spot in the tragedy of this war is this mutual appreciation of the men in the naval service.

"Our officers who have returned confirm the statements of Admiral Sims, (Commander in Chief of the American naval forces in British waters,) of the courtesies and kindness shown in every way by the Admiralty and the officers of the British fleet.

"I had hoped to have the pleasure of visiting Great Britain and of personally expressing this feeling of mutual working together, but the task here of making ready more and more units for the fleet is a very serious one, and my duty chains me here.

"The order in all the navy is full speed ahead in the construction of destroyers and other craft, and the whole service is keyed up to press this program forward. Therefore, I shall not have the pleasure, until this program shall materialize, of a personal acquaintance and a conference which would be of such interest and value."

Sir Eric Geddes replied:

"I am exceedingly grateful for your letter. As you know, we, all of us here, have great admiration for your officers and men and for the splendid help they are giving in European waters. Further, we find Admiral Sims invaluable in counsel and in co-operation.

"I fully appreciate how onerous your office must be at the present time, and, much though I regret that you do not see your way to visiting this country in the near future, I hope we may some day have the pleasure of welcoming you here."

QUEENSTOWN, Ireland, May 13.—Admiral Sir Lewis Bayly, Commander in Chief of the British naval forces on the Irish Coast, today issued the following order addressed to the American destroyer flotilla:

"On the anniversary of the arrival of the first United States men of war at Queenstown I wish to express my deep gratitude to the United States officers and ratings for the skill, energy, and unfailing good nature which they all have consistently shown, and which qualities have so materially assisted in the war by enabling ships of the allied powers to cross the ocean in comparative freedom.

"To command you is an honor, to work with you is a pleasure, to know you is to know the best traits of the Anglo-Saxon race.

"BAYLY, Commander in Chief."

MAY CALL CAILLAUX TODAY.

Ex-Premier Asks Court to Hear Him in Bonnet Rouge Case.

PARIS, May 13.—At the trial of former members of the Bonnet Rouge staff today M. Magnan continued his pleading for M. Duval, who was director of the newspaper.

The courtroom was crowded in the expectation that former Premier Caillaux, whose testimony was called for yesterday by counsel for M. Landau, one of the reporters who is charged with treason, would appear, but he did not do so. The law provides for an interval of twenty-four hours between the time of summoning a witness and his appearance in court, and M. Caillaux probably will be called tomorrow morning.

Today he wrote a letter to the court asking to be heard in the Duval case. The former Premier says that every patriotic citizen, especially if he be a member of Parliament, should as a matter of duty concern himself with the problem of peace and that military direction should be allied with diplomatic direction in the conduct of the war.

M. Caillaux adds that it was not until July of last year that he became personally acquainted with the German banker Marx, through whom funds are said to have been supplied for German propaganda in France.

Nearly the whole session of the trial today was occupied by speeches of counsel for M. Joucla, a reporter of the Bonnet Rouge, and M. Marion, assistant manager of the newspaper.

The court adjourned this afternoon until 9 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Regiments Cited for Sixth Time.

PARIS, May 13.—President Poincaré yesterday visited the battlefront and bestowed the red "fourragere" on two French regiments which had gained their sixth citation in the recent fighting. Heretofore the Foreign Legion has been the only unit which has won the distinctive red, or Legion of Honor, colored aiguillettes by earning six citations.

FRENCH KEEP ROADS CLEARED FOR ARMY

Markers Direct Americans on the March to Reinforce the Allies in Picardy.

INTERESTING GIRL AT FRONT

In Short Khaki Skirt and Puttees, Yvonne, of Ambulance Corps, Smokes Black Cigars.

By FLOYD P. GIBBONS.

Copyright, 1918, by The Tribune Company, Chicago.

[FOURTH ARTICLE.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMIES UNDER GENERAL FOCH IN FRANCE, May 13.—When we swung into the road at daybreak the next morning and continued the march north, much speculation went the rounds as to our destination. A much debated question was as to whether our forces would be incorporated with Foch's mobile reserve army and held in readiness for a possible counteroffensive, or whether we would be placed in one of the line armies and assigned to holding a position in the path of the German push. But all this conjecture resulted in nothing more than passing time.

Our way led over by roads and side lanes which the French master of circulation had laid down for us. Behind an active front, the French reserve their main roads for the use of fast motor traffic and the rushing up of supplies or reserves in cases of necessity. Thousands of poilus, too old for combat duty, do repair work on those main arteries. All minor and slow-moving traffic is sidetracked to keep the main line clear. At times we were forced to cross the main high roads and then we encountered a forward and backward stream of traffic to and from the front.

At one of these intersections I sought a grass bank at the side of the road for a rest. Two interesting actors in this great drama were there before me. One was an American soldier wearing a blue brassard with white letters "M. P." He was a military policeman on duty as a road marker, whose function is to regulate traffic and prevent congestion.

French Girl in Khaki.

Beside him was seated a peculiar-looking person whose knee-length skirts of khaki exposed legs encased in wrap puttees. A motor coat of yellow leather and a visor cap of a British Tommy completed the costume. The hair showing beneath the crown of the cap was rather long and straight, but betrayed traces of having been recently close-cropped. For all her masculine appearance, she was French, and the young road marker was lavishing upon her everything he had gleaned in his freshman year of French in a Spokane high school.

I offered my cigarette case around and was surprised when the girl refrained. That surprise increased when I saw her extract from a leather case of her own a full-fledged black cigar, which she proceeded to light and smoke with gusto. When I expressed my greater surprise she increased the same by shrugging her shoulders prettily, plunging one guantleted hand into a side pocket and producing a pipe with a pouch of tobacco.

There was nothing dainty about that pipe. It had no delicate amber stem, nor circlet of filagreed gold. There was no meerschaum ornamentation. It was just a good old Jimmy pipe, with a full-grown cake in a black, burnt bowl, and a well-bitten, hard rubber mouthpiece. It looked like one of those that father used to consent to have boiled once in a year after mother had charged it with ruining the lace curtains.

But she was a girl, and her name was Yvonne. A red-winged letter "A" on her coat lapel placed her in the automobile service and a motor ambulance at the roadside explained her special branch of work. She inquired the meaning of my correspondent's insignia and then explained that she had drawn pastelles for a Paris publication before the war, but had been transporting wounded since. The French lesson proceeded and Spokane Steve and I learned from her that the longest word in the French language is spelled "unconstitutionellement." Some day I hope both of us will be able to pronounce it.

Spokane Steve "Comprawa."

On the girl's right wrist was a silver chain bracelet with an identification disk. In response to our interested gaze she exhibited it to us, and upon her own volition informed us that she was a descendant from the same family as Joan of Arc. Steve heard and winked at me, with the remark that they couldn't pull any stuff like that on anybody from Spokane, because he had never heard that the Maid of Orleans had been married. Yvonne must have understood the last word, because she explained forthwith that she had not claimed direct descent from the famous Jeanne, but only from the same family. Steve looked her in the eye, and said "J'ai compraw." She explained the meaning of the small gold and silver medals suspended from the bracelet. She detached two and presented them to us. One of them bore in relief the image of a man in flowing robes, carrying a child on his shoulder and the reverse depicted a tourist driving a motor through hilly country.

"This is St. Christophe," said Yvonne. "He is the patron saint of travelers. His medal is good luck against accidents on the road. Here is one of St. Elias. He is the new patron saint of aviators. You remember. Didn't he go to heaven in a fiery chariot, or fly up on golden wings, or something like that? Anyhow, all aviators wear one of his medals."

St. Christophe is now attached to my identification disk. Steve declared the infantrymen traveled too slow ever to have anything happen to them, and that he was going to give his to a friend who drove a truck. When I fell in line with the next passing battery and moved down the road Spokane Steve and Yvonne of the family of Jeanne had launched into a discussion of prize-fighting and chewing tobacco.

In billets that night in a village not far from Beauvais a singing contest for a prize of $50 offered by a battalion commander was resumed with intense rivalry between the tenors and bassos of Batteries A and B. A Battery lost man was crowing "Annie Laurie" when a Battery A booster in the audience remarked audibly:

"Good Lord! I'd rather hear 'First Call!'" "First Call" is the bugle note that disturbs sleep and starts the men on the next day's work.

A worried Lieutenant found me in the crowd around the rolling kitchen, and inquired:

"Do you know whether there's a provost guard in that inn down the road?"

I couldn't inform him, but I inquired the reason for his alarm.

"I've got a hunch that the prune juice is runing knee-deep tonight," he replied, "and I don't want any of my section trying to march tomorrow with swelled heads."

"Prune juice" is not slang. It is a veritable expression and anybody who thinks that the favorite of the boarding house table can't produce the fermented article that is tres forte in the way of a throat burner is greatly mistaken. In France the fermented juice of the prune is called water of life, but it carries a dead-to-the-world kick. The simple prune which the army used to call 'native son' by reason of his California origin, now ranks with its most inebriating sisters of the vine.

The flow of eau de vie must have been dammed at the inn. On the road the next day I saw a mule driver wearing a sixteen candle power black eye. When I inquired the source of the lamp shade, he replied:

"This is my first wound in the war, and a cop down in that town had an 'offensive' that's spelt like scissors, but you say it some other way."

lated today. The Americans had been trying for some time to draw the fire of certain enemy units.

"Leave Fritz to me," said a happy-faced young American, who, putting an alarm clock under his arm, disappeared into No Man's Land under cover of darkness and fastened the clock to a wire.

Soon the alarm rang, whereupon the Germans opened fire. The alarm had been so arranged that the clock continued to ring intermittently, and each time drew a violent fire from the enemy. Meanwhile the Americans rested in their trenches and enjoyed a hearty laugh.

Took Foe's Street Signs.

An American officer turned the tables on the enemy recently. The Germans had retired during a bombardment to concrete dugouts behind their trenches, leaving the first three lines to one man, who went around setting off flares, so as to create the impression that the whole front was alive with Germans.

An American patrol leader went over and discovered the ruse. He killed the one German, invaded the trenches, and gathered dozens of street signs which the Germans had posted, returning to his own lines with the signs tucked under his arm.

Improved weather conditions led to increased air activity in the Toul sector today. Many American planes were working over the enemy lines and observation balloons were up for the first time in many days.

The American artillery last night and this morning directed a heavy and harassing fire on German rear area, where it is known troops are billeted and it is suspected that others are moving.

C. M. HITCHCOCK ENLISTS.

Refuses Important Post in Washington to Join Army as Private.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Curtice M. Hitchcock, Assistant Secretary of the Council of National Defense and of the Advisory Commission to the Council, has resigned that office to enlist in the army as a private of Coast Artillery. Mr. Hitchcock, who is a college man, and was formerly of the staff of THE NEW YORK TIMES, is known as an expert on labor problems. He was the representative of the Council of National Defense on the recent American tour of the British Labor Mission, headed by Sir Stephenson Kent, and a few weeks ago declined an important administrative post in the new Labor Administration.

Grosvenor B. Clarkson, Secretary of the Council, paid a cordial tribute to Mr. Hitchcock's past service, and said: "We consider that the enlistment in the ranks of Mr. Hitchcock, who was logically in line for civil positions of great responsibility, does us all honor here in the council and indicates how the talented men of the younger generation, of whom another example is Ralph Hayes, private secretary to the Secretary of War, believe that the democracy of America can best be served by getting on the firing line."

NEW YORKERS ON THE LIST.

Private Leonard Leo Daltnn, reported killed in action in yesterday's list from General Pershing, was until last November on duty at Camp Upton with the provisional battalion. In November he was ordered to France, where he was assigned to one of the line regiments. Dalton was 26 years old. His wife and two little children survive him. A brother, William E. Dalton, is a member of the 153d Infantry at Camp Wadsworth, S. C.

Corporal Henry E. Woods of 224 West Sixteenth Street is reported missing. The address given is that of Corporal Arthur G. Woods, whose brother, Frederick Woods, still lives there. Frederick Woods said yesterday that Sunday night, in his absence, a messenger had called with a telegram for him, but had not left it. His brother Arthur, he added, was 17 years old, a graduate of Public School 14, and one of the best athletes in New York. The boy had worked for Park & Tilford.

Albert Decsi, missing, lived with a cousin at 812 Putnam Avenue, Brooklyn. He is 23 years old. He enlisted in the 102d Infantry at New Haven. A brother, George, is a Sergeant in the Aviation Corps.

Private Benjamin H. Hendrickson, reported slightly wounded, is a son of the late Albert Hendrickson of Valley Stream. He lived with a sister and two brothers up to the time he entered the army. He was at Camp Upton for several months before he was ordered to France. He is a member of a machine gun unit.

Captain Charles Porterfield, Jr., listed as slightly wounded in the casualty list cabled Sunday, is a son of Charles Porterfield of Northport, L. I. He is 28 years old, a graduate of the Shattuck Military Academy at Faribault, Minn., and was commissioned a Second Lieutenant in the regular army in 1916. A brother, George Alander Porterfield, is a Captain in the British Army. The brother also was wounded recently.

BOSTON, May 13.—John W. Murphy of Jamaica Plain, Mass., mentioned in today's casualty list as having died of wounds, was a floor boy in the Boston Bureau of The Associated Press when war was declared. He went to France last September.

PROF. BOWMAN MISSING.

Former Princeton Professor May Be a Prisoner in Germany.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 13.—Professor Archibald A. Bowman, formerly head of the Department of Philosophy at Princeton University, has been reported missing at the front in France. From reports received by President Hibben it is learned that Professor Bowman was wounded in the early days of the drive. He was removed to a hospital a short distance behind the front lines, and in the rapid advance of the Germans the hospital was captured. He is now reported by the British War Office as missing, and grave fears are entertained for his safety, as his wound is said to have been serious.

Professor Bowman came here in 1912 as Professor of Philosophy. He returned to England in 1915 to enter the service of his country. Having already had some military training, he was held for a considerable time in England as an instructor in an officers' training school.

In 1914 and 1915, while he was still at Princeton, he was frequently seen practicing signalling with his colleague, Dr. Glover, who received the D. S. O. for his conduct during the Somme offensive and is still with the British forces in France.

Professor Norman Kemp Smith, another member of the Department of Philosophy, is now serving England.

Special to The New York Times.

UNION COURSE, L. I., May 13.—Charles Klein, who was a circus clown living here before he joined the colors, has written to friends describing a ride on a motor cycle through a barrage fire to deliver a message in an American sector in France.

"It was the hardest work I ever did," he wrote, "to dodge the holes in the road. Bing! A shell plunked behind me and ripped off my back tire. A piece of shrapnel knocked off my helmet, but it never touched me. Then I began to smell mustard gas. My eyes watered so that it was hard for me to see. I don't know how I did it, but I delivered my message. When I woke up I was in a hospital."

Klein is only 19 years old.

ANTI-LOAFING BILL SIGNED BY WHITMAN

All Able-Bodied Men Between 18 and 50 Must Work While the War Is On.

OTHER MEASURES APPROVED

Salary Increases Provided for Many Here Before Period for Signing Bills Expires.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 13.—Governor Whitman ended his thirty-day period for signing legislative bills at midnight tonight. Among the bills signed at the eleventh hour were many calling for salary increases for New Yorkers and providing pensions for them. Approximately 80 or 85 bills were signed tonight. In the omnibus veto there will be from 70 to 75 bills. The Governor will not make this list public until tomorrow.

Included in the omnibus veto, it is expected, will be the Towner bill authorizing domestic insurance companies to take over the business of the German insurance companies in New York City. This bill was urged by A. Mitchell Palmer, Alien Property Custodian at Washington, but was bitterly opposed by New York City insurance men.

The Robinson anti-loafing bill requiring all ablebodied men between the ages of 18 and 50, inclusive, to be "habitually and regularly engaged in some lawful, useful, and recognized business, profession, occupation, trade, or employment until the termination of the war," was signed by the Governor today. The bill will go into effect after a proclamation is issued by the Governor.

Loitering in the streets, saloons, depots, poolrooms, hotels, stores, and other places, under the wording of the bill, is considered prima facie evidence of violation of the act, and is punishable by a fine of $100 or imprisonment for three months, or both. Exemption is given to students and those made idle as the result of strikes. Claim for exemption on the ground that an idle person has an income sufficient for the support of himself and those dependent on him will not be accepted.

Will Keep Loafers Away.

In signing the Robinson bill the Governor turned back the Cowee bill, which was framed along the same lines, but which did not limit the application of the measure to the duration of the war. In a memorandum accompanying both measures, the Governor said:

"The purpose of the two measures is to force every ablebodied male person within the State to do his share toward remedying the conditions due to the present shortage of labor. They both contain provisions which will confine their operations to the class of persons which should be reached.

"Although there may be some question as to the constitutionality of both measures, yet if any advantage, however small, may be obtained in the prosecution of the war by reason of increased production, some measure of this kind should be enacted.

"I am informed that if this bill is not signed, many undesirable persons will continue to come to this State from New Jersey in order to escape the operation of the law in that State."

Both the Robinson bill and the Cowee bill were modeled to some extent after statutes already in force in New Jersey and Maryland.

Senator Knight's bill to include in taxable property stock in a domestic corporation held by a nonresident decedent was vetoed. This bill was framed to take care of such cases as that presented to the tax authorities upon the death of Hetty Green, when millions of dollars' worth of property here was not taxable. The Governor felt, he said, that the bill would be unconstitutional and discriminatory.

George B. Hawthorne, formerly bookkeeper in the New York City Police Department, will have opportunity to have the charges upon which he was dismissed reheard by the Police Commissioner.

The Governor vetoed the bill which would have permitted the head of any department, board, or commission in New York City to cancel or modify contracts with the unanimous approval of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. The bill, the Governor said, was too broad, and lacked needed safeguards.

Increase for Swann's Aids.

One of the many salary bills signed by the Governor is the Nicoll measure, providing an increase of 10 per cent. in the salaries of all employes in the administrative force of the New York County District Attorney's office.

Governor Whitman tonight issued this statement on finances:

"I have approved appropriations made by the Legislature which amount to $81,519,320.04, as against appropriations made by the Legislature of 1917, and approved by me, of $79,742,834.21, an increase this year of $1,776,525.83.

"In approving appropriations of the Legislature of 1918, I have in every instance given due consideration to all necessities brought about by the present state of war. I have found it necessary to approve large increases in the institutional group for the proper maintenance of those confined therein. I have considered and made every allowance to the employes of the State to aid in their efforts to meet the burden placed upon them by the war. I have considered and allowed every increase for improvement upon the canals and highways so that their completion and their proper maintenance may facilitate in every way the transportation of war necessities from inland cities to the coast.

"For the first time in the history of the State, all of the appropriations for the general purposes of government are itemized and have been enacted into law in such form that the purpose for which they are to be used is set forth simply and plainly.

"In accordance with the established custom of this administration, there will be a direct tax to meet the service of the State. The tax imposed will be 1.05 mills. The revenues, as estimated by the Controller, will meet all other necessities and leave a substantial working balance in the treasury."

Senator Sage's bill, which would have permitted the leasing of surplus canal waters for power purposes, was vetoed. "The bill as originally introduced contained a provision permitting a county or municipal corporation to bid for a release of power," said the Governor in disapproving the bill. "This provision did not appear in the bill as finally passed, therefore should the bill become a law the leases must be given to private corporations or persons, and might be for a period of fifty years." He said that the bill should have provided municipalities with the right to bid, and that the right to enter into the power business should be subject to the approval of the Public Service Commission.

Senator Whitney's bill regulating the sale and distribution of habit-forming drugs was signed today over the objection of the Solicitor of the United States Treasury Department. This is the bill framed after an investigation into the drug situation in New York City by the legislative committee headed by Senator Whitney. It was urged in opposition to the bill that it would hamper the Federal authorities in obtaining necessary supplies, but the Governor, in approving the measure, disagrees with the Federal officials.

The Cromwell bill transferring the jurisdiction over ferries at New York City from the Department of Docks and Ferries to the Department of Plant and Structures also was signed.

The Governor signed Senator Murphy's bill providing that the New York City Board of Aldermen, upon recommendation of the Board of Estimate, may increase the salaries or number of employes in the Kings County Registrar's office and making the city instead of the registrar liable for damages and injuries resulting from mistakes in return of certified searches made by his office.

The Walker bill, providing for retirement upon pension of officers and employes of the General Sessions Court of New York City, after twenty-five years service also became a law. Another salary bill signed was that of Assemblyman Rourke increasing the salaries of attendants of the Court of Special Sessions in New York County from $1,800 to $2,100 a year.

Senator Nicoll's bill which would have increased the salaries of the Surrogates of New York and Kings Counties $2,500 a year was disapproved as it "would operate to increase the compensation of the Surrogates now in office, and would therefore be unconstitutional."

New Jobs in The Bronx.

The Governor signed the McLaughlin bill which authorizes the District Attorney of Bronx County to appoint and fix the salary of five assistant district attorneys at not to exceed $5,000 each and three assistants at not to exceed $3,500 each, a chief clerk at $3,500 and a secretary at $3,000. It also authorizes him to appoint three stenographers, one at $2,000 a year and the others at $1,800 a year. The Governor approved of the bill because its authorization features put increases up to the District Attorney and not the Legislature.

The Cowee bill, permitting the employment of children between 14 and 16 from July 1 to Aug. 31, upon obtaining a Summer vacation permit, also was signed.

Other New York City bills signed include the Donohue bill permitting the city to engage and compensate physicians unlicensed in this State for the city hospitals to alleviate shortage conditions because of the war; the Dowling bill, providing that one of the Assistant District Attorneys in New York County shall receive $10,000 annually, and the other thirteen $7,500, as at present; the Dunnigan bill, giving civil service employes of the New York City Bureau of Buildings opportunity to be heard before being dismissed, and the Nicoll bill, creating the position of Deputy Transfer Tax Assistant in New York County at $3,500 a year.

READY TO ROUND UP IDLERS IN THIS CITY

Police and District Attorney's Office Already Have Compiled a Census of These Undesirables.

The New York City campaign against the work-weary in this city will be directed from Police Headquarters, the District Attorney's office, and from the offices of the Sheriffs of the various boroughs. Pending the issuance of a proclamation by Governor Whitman, the city authorities intented themselves last night with preliminary work.

It was said at Police Headquarters that Commissioner Enright will give the enforcement of the new law his personal attention. As soon as word was received of the signing of the bill, a large force of detectives, drawn largely from the Vagrancy Squad, was hustled out to check up the idlers. Cruising up and down Broadway and hobnobbing with the sojourners on street corners, the members of the squad took note of what was practically a census of the Rialto's drifting leisure class. When the law goes into operation, all men who cannot give a good excuse for doing nothing will be haled before a Magistrate as undesirable citizens.

Assistant District Attorney Smith, who with a big force of men has been a regular Sunday-morning visitor to the Tenderloin, said yesterday that for several days his men had been compiling a calling list of Broadway characters with well-established reputations as idlers. Mr. Smith said that he would took in on Broadway and its environs the moment the law allowed. He added that he would stage a big roundup of "tango and lounge lizards, and, no matter how much money these idlers have, it wouldn't help them."

Questioned about his enforcement of the new law, Sheriff Griffin of Kings County said that he merely awaited the word. The Sheriff said that he had organized a force of special deputies, who will make daily visits to parks, baseball fields, motion-picture houses, and other places in search of work slackers. He declared that so far as Brooklyn was concerned he planned to "put the work dodger in a class with the dodo."

LEWIS FORCES PLAN A TEST OF STRENGTH

Contemplate Calling of Unofficial Republican State Convention.

WHITMAN MEN OPPOSED

But Dissatisfaction in Brooklyn, Richmond, Queens, and the Bronx May Defeat the Governor.

There will be an early test of strength between the Whitman forces in the Republican State organization and the forces behind the rival Gubernatorial boom for Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, if the Lewis leaders carry out their present plans to force the calling of an unofficial Republican State Convention. In order to issue the call for a State convention the Republican State Committee must meet, because it is the sole agency which under the statute and the party rules can exercise that function.

Republican State Chairman George A. Glynn, who is in the Governor's corner, is known to be decidedly adverse to a convention this year. In the circumstances the Lewis supporters would be compelled to seek the signatures of a majority of the State Committee members to a petition calling for a meeting of the committee in order to compel Chairman Glynn to act.

Attorney General Lewis is said to strongly favor the plan as a means of bringing Republicans throughout the State together for deliberation, and because it is the only method by which a Republican State platform can be adopted. Chairman Glynn, on the other hand, regards an unofficial State convention as absolutely unnecessary because all the platform the Republicans need is the record of Governor Whitman. This view was expressed by Chairman Glynn before Mr. Lewis declared himself in the fight.

The leaders who prompted Mr. Lewis to take up the fight against the Governor have very definite views regarding what should go into the platform. They want a plank committing any candidate who is elected Governor to the restoration of the State convention. Attorney General Lewis favors such a plan, but Governor Whitman, though twice elected on a platform containing a convention plank, has steadfastly set his face against the repeal of the present direct nominations law. The unofficial State convention, it was pointed out yesterday, would afford an opportunity to the leaders opposed to Whitman to bring out this fact and to sear into the Republican memory the fact that Governor Whitman in the Mayoralty election in this city last Fall abandoned the Republican candidate nominated in the primaries.

The anti-Whitman campaign in all parts of the State is expected to be in full swing within a very few days. Supporters of Mr. Lewis believe that he will be the only anti-Whitman candidate in the Republican primaries, but indications are not lacking that there may be others. The Whitman forces are suspected of harboring designs of splitting the anti-Whitman vote up State by contriving in some fashion to bring about the placing of a second up-State man in the field. In this city some of the anti-Whitman leaders, who do not favor Attorney General Lewis, notably ex-Senator William M. Bennett, are credited with attempts to induce Supreme Court Justice James C. Cropsey of Brooklyn to enter the race. No word came from Justice Cropsey yesterday to indicate whether he would make a fight for the nomination, but some were inclined to regard the announcement that he would go to Syracuse within a few days to make a speech at a Republican meeting as a desire to become a candidate.

The attitude of the Brooklyn organization in the Gubernatorial fight will probably come in for discussion at a meeting this evening of the executive committee of the Kings County Republican Committee. The Republican organization in Kings la split wide open and the big Brooklyn vote which contributed so materially to Governor Whitman's victory at the polls in 1916 is not likely to go to him this year. It was predicted last night that the bulk of it would go to his opponent in the primaries. Republicans in Brooklyn believe Jacob A. Livingston, their leader, will throw his support to Mr. Lewis, provided Justice Cropsey does not run. Livingston has not as yet publicly declared himself in opposition to Whitman.

"Will you support Mr. Lewis in the primaries?" Mr. Livingston was asked.

"I cannot say yet," he replied. "I shall wait until he makes known his program. Before I say anything further I would like to know just what his platform is to be. I am pleased, though, to see that there is to be more than one candidate in the race for the nomination. It will be a good thing for the party, I think."

Joseph De Bragga, head of the Republican organization in Queens, and the Richmond County Republican organization are expected to give their support to Attorney General Lewis. In the Bronx, too, there is considerable dissatisfaction with Governor Whitman among the Republicans. The New York County organization, of which Samuel S. Koenig is the head, will probably line up behind the Governor, even though many influential Republicans among its members will individually support Attorney General Lewis, Governor Whitman is to be entertained by the Republican leaders, men and women, at dinner at the Republican Club on Thursday night, and afterward is to deliver an address at the meeting of the New York County Republican Committee.

Friends of Governor Whitman yesterday declared that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt would take no active part in the State campaign this Fall. While it is believed Colonel Roosevelt would much prefer to see Attorney General Lewis win, he could not, according to Whitman supporters, serve any purpose useful to himself or which would tend to promote any aspirations he may harbor for 1920 by mixing in a State fight this Fall, especially as he would be compelled in such a fight to stand shoulder to shoulder with Republican leaders who fought him bitterly in 1912.

The New York Anti-Saloon League in a statement made public last night openly charged Mr. Lewis with being opposed to prohibition and in league with the liquor interests and declared that as an organization it would fight his nomination and election.

"The brewers will cheerfully spend a million dollars or even five million dollars to defeat the Governor because they believe that if he wins New York will ratify and that if New York does so the necessary thirty-six States will be secured next year," the statement read in part. "The Anti-Saloon League is beginning at once to arouse the people to a realization of the danger of the brewers again getting complete control of the State Government."

ALDRIDGE IS FOR WHITMAN.

"I Shall Give Him My Full Support," Says State Committeeman.

Special to The New York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 13.—Organization Republicans lost no time today in lining up behind State Committeeman George W. Aldridge in favor of Governor Whitman's renomination, although Attorney General Merton E. Lewis has a large personal following in this city.

"I am really very sorry Mr. Lewis has allowed his name to be used as a candidate," said Mr. Aldridge this afternoon. "I am unequivocally committed to the renomination of Governor Whitman, and shall work for his renomination and give him my full support. Moreover, I am confident that he will be nominated and elected by a large plurality."

Further than this Mr. Aldridge declined to talk. Neither would he discuss the possibility of ex-Justice Arthur E. Sutherland of this city being a candidate for the Attorney Generalship. Organization men say that feature of the coming contest will be settled as soon as Justice Sutherland returns from Camp Dix, where his son is training in the army.

LEWIS WILL NOT RESIGN.

Says He Won't Neglect His Official Duties for Campaigning.

ALBANY, May 13.—Attorney General Merton E. Lewis, who announced last night that he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor against Governor Whitman in the September primaries, said tonight that he would not resign his office in order to conduct his campaign.

"I was elected last year by a very handsome majority to continue for another year in charge of the State's legal affairs," Mr. Lewis said. "The legal business of the State is of very great importance and cannot be neglected. I do not intend to neglect it. I am receiving a salary from the State in exchange for my services in caring for its business, and I shall continue to earn the salary by giving to the State full value therefor.

"There is a full day's work for the Attorney General of this State every day in the week. Any campaign speaking tour would inevitably interfere with the performance of my duty as Attorney General. I do not intend that the State shall pay me a salary for neglecting the State's important legal business."

To Sell Old Arsenal Here.

ALBANY, May 13.—Governor Whitman signed the Sage bill today, providing that the proceeds from the sale of the State Arsenal land and buildings, at Seventh Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street, New York, be applied to the purchase of land and the construction of a new arsenal in Albany.

MARYLAND IDLER FINED.

J. M. Thompson, Prominent in Baltimore, Fails to Register.

BALTIMORE, May 13.—James Madison Thompson, well known in society and a former stock broker, at a hearing today in the Police Court, was fined $25 and costs for having failed to register under the Maryland compulsory work law.

Mr. Thompson paid his fine and departed from the station, with the court's admonition that he obtain employment at once.

Bayonne Rounds Up Loafers.

A crusade against loafing in Bayonne was begun yesterday by the police under the direction of Inspector Daniel A. Cady, and they intend strictly enforcing the proclamation issued by Governor Walter E. Edge calling upon every ablebodied man to perform some kind of labor. All the saloons, poolrooms, theatres, and other places where idlers collect were visited, and names taken. Warrants will be issued for arrests, and Recorder William J. Cain will send to jail those who refuse to work.

PROPORTIONAL PLAN BEATEN

Commons Rejects an Experiment in Representation.

LONDON, May 13.—The proposal to make an experimental trial of proportional representation in 100 selected Parliamentary constituencies, which was tentatively arranged when the Electoral Reform bill was adopted recently, was rejected by the House of Commons tonight by a vote of 186 to 110.

This decision finally disposes of proportional representation so far as the present Parliament is concerned.

George Washington Seeks Citizenship

Among those who applied for citizenship papers to Justice Joseph Aspinall in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday was a middle-aged man who told the Justice his name was George Washington. He is a candy manufacturer, and lives at 118 Prospect Park West. He explained that he was born in Belgium of British parents and was a subject of Great Britain. Because the applicant did not have a sufficient number of witnesses, his application was put over for one week.

CRITICISES TESTS OF LIBERTY MOTOR

Methods Not Tolerated in Making Milk Bottles, Engineer Cammen Says.

SENDS LETTER TO SENATE

Lack of Adaptability to Bristol Airplane Should Have Been Seen at Start, He Asserts.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The Senate showed a disposition today to hurry the aircraft investigation. During debate on the bill to utilize aircraft as mail carriers Senators Smith of Georgia and King of Utah, Democrats, insisted that, before considering airplane service at home, the country ought to turn out machines for use in France.

Senator Brandegee of Connecticut, through whom Gutzon Borglum expects to make his defense before the Senate, put into the record a letter he had received from Leon Cammen, aeronautic expert of New York, criticising the failure to adapt the Liberty motor to the Bristol airplane. Mr. Cammen, a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, the Aeronautical Society of America, the New York Academy of Sciences, and the Society of Automotive Engineers, wrote, under date of May 12, that if adequate tests had been made the Government would have known that the Liberty motor, as constructed, would not work with the Bristol plane. In his letter Mr. Cammen wrote:

"There has appeared today in all newspapers a statement made before the Senate with respect to the Liberty motor in the Bristol plane of great significance as throwing a vivid light on the entire subject of this unfortunate adventure in engineering design. It is stated that the motor overheats; to a layman this means next to nothing; to an engineer it tells a big story, and raises questions pregnant with importance. These questions are:

"1. Does this overheating indicate a basic defectiveness of design, or can it be corrected by some expedient?

"2. Why was it not discovered on the testing stand, long before the motor was put into the Bristol machine, and was it not due to improper methods of testing the motor?"

Radiation Not Sufficient.

Answering his first question, as to overheating, Mr. Cammen wrote that the radiation of the Liberty motor was not sufficient, "because it was designed for an engine more efficient and better designed than the Liberty motor." This defect, he said, could be overcome by putting larger radiators in the Liberty motor, but this, he thought, would be disastrous from a military point of view, as it would add too much weight to the motor, and the Bristol plane could not carry it.

"A radiator 50 per cent. bigger than the present one would, at a speed of ninety miles an hour, increase the power consumption roughly by more than 75 per cent.," wrote Mr. Cammen.

Taking up the second question as to why the defects in the Liberty motor were not discovered in tests, Mr. Cammen wrote that they "could very easily have been established in any decent laboratory with such equipment as any gas engineer ought to know how to use." He went on to say that the standard tests used by the Government for airplane engines permitted making cooling adjustments during the tests, which gives opportunity to try out the engine under "very different conditions from those in actual flight, when, of course, such adjustments are impossible.

"That such a test in which adjustments of this kind are permitted will lead to grief in actual flights ought to be clear to any unprejudiced person," wrote Mr. Cammen. "It is unfortunate for our fighting prospects that in the production of aircraft engineering methods are permitted which would not be tolerated in the manufacture of milk bottles. This comparison with milk bottles is used advisedly as a cold fact and not as a rhetorical form of speech.

"May I add that, as an engineer, I am deeply sorry that the entire matter of the Liberty motor and plane production is being handled as a political question of veracity between various individuals, instead of as a matttr of technical records and tests? This can be done very easily, and the whole matter disposed of in not more than three days."

No Data from Borglum Yet.

Senator Brandegee made no comment on the Cammen letter. He said tonight he had not yet received any data from Mr. Borglum.

"I have no part in this affair, except to find out what has happened to our airplane program and to help speed up the production of airplanes," said Senator Brandegee. "Mr. Borglum has picked me out simply because I represent his own State. Whatever data he gives me I shall turn over to the Military Affairs Committee."

Members of the Military Affairs Committee were impatient today over the failure of Senator Thompson, Chairman of the Committee on Audit, to report out the Chamberlain resolution empowering the Military Committee to take up the aircraft inquiry. Senator Thompson explained that he wanted to take up with Secretary of War Baker the proposal for the inquiry to ascertain if he had any suggestions as to its scope. Senators on the Military Affairs Committee informed Senator Thompson that, if he did not report the resolution out in a day or so, they would ask the Senate to call it up. Senator Thompson is expected to report it out tomorrow.

Senator Thompson favors limiting the scope of the inquiry to matters not related to those to be taken up by the Department of Justice, which is investigating alleged criminality in airship production. The disposition of the Senate is to make a broad inquiry, but to avoid calling witnesses to be used by the Department of Justice, so as not to allow any immunity baths. The Senate investigation is expected to be opened toward the end of this week.

BORGLUM NOW SILENT.

Is Preparing Affidavits to be Presented to the Senate.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Conn., May 13.—Gutzon Borglum said tonight that he had nothing more to say at this time in the airplane controversy.

"I am preparing affidavits for the Senate, and I expect to be in Washington Wednesday. Whatever I have to say will be made public through Senator Brandegee," he said.

CREEL AGAIN CRITICISED.

Kitchin and Other Members Resent Reported Slur on Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Representative Claude Kitchin, Democratic leader of the House, today characterized George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information, as "unworthy of the respect of any decent citizen of the United States" if he made the remark about the loyalty of members of Congress attributed to him in a New York newspaper today.

Members of Congress were much exercised about the speech Mr. Creel made in the Church of the Ascension in New York on Sunday, and his reference to loyalty was the subject of an animated discussion in the cloak rooms early in the day.

The New York World quoted Mr. Creel as saying: "I do not like slumming, so I won't explore into the hearts of Congress." This reply was quoted as having been made in answer to these questions: "What is a loyal heart? Have all the members of Congress loyal hearts?"

The matter was brought up in the House by Representatives Gillett of Massachusetts, acting Republican floor leader. Mr. Gillett read the quotation and asked Mr. Kitchin what he thought of an official who should so insult members of Congress. Mr. Kitchin threw doubt upon the correctness of the quotation, saying:

"I would rather see the quotation verified, but I will say this: If Mr. Creel or any one else made any such statement, or has any such opinion of Congress, then he is not worthy of the respect of any member of this House, of Congress, or of any decent citizen of the United States."

This sentiment was vigorously applauded by the House.

PREPARE FOR NEW CITIZENS

Officials Plan Speedy Enforcement of Law Approved Saturday.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—In co-operation with the Army General Staff, the Naturalization Bureau of the Department of Labor set in motion today carefully prepared plans for the speedy enforcement of the act approved by President Wilson Saturday night, which almost immediately will confer American citizenship upon 123,277 aliens now in the national army, in addition to many thousands in civil life.

Through neglect or ignorance of the terms of the old naturalization law, many aliens now classed as enemies failed to complete applications before the United States courts closed the doors to further proceedings under that law. Now those who meet the tests of the Government will be permitted to acquire their citizenship papers.

Provost General Crowder's figures show that in the first draft 457,703 aliens were called, and of these 76,545 were certified for service. There were 180,461 persons among the total called who had declared their intention to become American citizens and 46,732 of these were certified for service.

Officials hope to complete their work so far as the army is concerned within two or three weeks, so that all eligible men affected may be sent overseas. Of the men in the national army affected by the law, 46,732 have taken out their first papers. The present citizenship of the remainder is as follows: Cobelligerents, 49,208; neutrals, 11,206; countries allied with enemy, 1,902; Austria-Hungary, 13,233; Germany, 928. German citizens cannot be naturalized and they are being weeded out of the army.

CALDER ENTERS PROTEST.

Objects to Proposed Order to Stop Building Here.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Senator Calder of New York appeared before the War Industries Board today to protest against an order in contemplation before the board to stop building operations in New York City during the war so as to conserve materials and labor. He argued that, while he favored restriction of building, so far as practicable, a grave situation would be forced upon New York if all building operations were stopped.

Senator Calder pointed out that New York was congested and that the building of homes to accommodate the constantly increasing population was imperative. New York's building operations in 1917, he said, aggregated $35,000,000, as against $190,000,000 in 1916. Any further curtailment, he declared, would put New York to the necessity of calling upon the Government for housing facilities.

The Senator said tonight he believed the War Board would not issue the restrictive order.

FOOD RULE VIOLATOR AIDS THE RED CROSS

Middendorf & Rohrs Contribute $1,000 Because They Broke Sugar Orders.

SEVEN JOBBERS TO EXPLAIN

Accused Profiteers Will Be Brought Before the Federal Food Board This Week.

In its investigation of a ring of profiteers alleged to be doing business with offices in the Produce Exchange, the Federal Food Board has rounded up evidence upon which at least seven jobbers will be brought up for hearing during the present week. Officials of the Food Board would not reveal any of the facts which have been uncovered by the inspectors of the board, further than to state that the operations have involved very serious violations of the regulations adopted by the United States Food Administration to protect the public from exploitation.

The Federal Food Board announced yesterday that it had received a check for $1,000 from the firm of Middendorf & Rohrs of 33 Gansevoort Street, which was forwarded to the New York Chapter of the American Red Cross. The check was offered by the firm as restitution for its violation of sugar regulations, the firm having admitted that it had been selling sugar to individual consumers in much greater quantities than the United States Food Administration permits.

To facilitate the handling of millions of pounds of flour which are being given up by individual clubs and communities throughout the country for shipment abroad, the Federal Food Board announced yesterday that an Executive Committee would be in charge of the disposition of this flour in each of the nine zones created by the Grain Corporation. The Executive Committee will name collecting or assembling points, to which all the flour will be shipped, indicating a flat price level to be paid at the assembling point. Agents will be appointed at the points of assembly to handle receipts, arrange for warehouse accommodations, and take care of all reshipments. Payments will be made by the Grain Corporation on receipt of bills of lading at the New York office for flour shipped to New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and Galveston. The Grain Corporation agents at these points will arrange for its final disposition.

Flour in large packages suitable for overseas shipment will be exported immediately. Smaller packages will be repacked for export or will be disposed of locally. Whenever flour is thus released for domestic use, an equivalent amount, properly packed for export, will be sent immediately from the mills. The Food Administration has assured all who give up their flour that an equivalent amount will go to Europe. In its appeal for further contributions of flour the Federal Food Board stated:

"At the present rate of consumption each bushel would provide bread for at least one soldier in Europe until the next harvest relieves the necessity for such individual sacrifice at home. And with every indication of bumper crops the wheat seed can easily be thrown on the market."

The Federal Food Board made public yesterday a classification of wheat and substitute breads. The wheat breads include white wheat bread, whole wheat bread, graham bread and crackers, macaroni, spaghetti, noodles, and wheat breakfast foods. Victory bread contains 75 per cent. wheat. The substitutes are oatmeal, potatoes, rice, hominy, barley, and the 100 per cent. substitute breads—corn pone, muffins, biscuits, and all kinds of bread made only from corn, oats, barley, and all other wheat substitutes. These are usually made with baking powder or soda and sour milk instead of yeast and are sometimes known as "quick breads."

MOTOR LINES FOR FARMERS.

Hoover Commends Extension of the Rural Express.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The Federal Food Administrator, Herbert C. Hoover, has indorsed the extension of the rural motor express as an aid to food production and distribution. In a letter to the Highways Transport Committee of the Council of National Defense, made public today, he says:

"The development of the rural motor express idea, in my opinion, is in the line of progress and should redound to the benefit of the producer, the consumer, and the railroads. This means of transportation should facilitate delivery, conserve labor, conserve foodstuffs, and should effect delivery of foods in better condition."

The organization of new rural express lines in the vicinity of cities is being urged through the State Councils of Defense, co-operating with the National Council. Surveys of existing lines show that in nearly every instance there has been a marked increase in the production of perishable foodstuffs as soon as a line is established. The heavy load on local shipping facilities has made it difficult for farmers to get supplies, machinery, and repairs promptly this Spring, and where regular motor express lines were available they have greatly aided in the food campaign. The labor shortage is so acute that every farmer is needed in the fields.

SHIP EGGS HERE BY AUTO.

Poultry Associations Overcome Transportation Difficulties.

TRENTON, May 13.—The Millville, Vineland, and Harmonton Poultry Associations are successfully supporting an auto truck service for the transportation of eggs to the New York markets three times per week and, according to a bulletin issued today from the Bureau of Markets of the State Department of Agriculture, it is hoped that wartime transportation difficulties will be largely overcome.

It was also stated that the Gloucester County Produce Growers' Association had been organized for the purpose of obtaining reliable market information and satisfactory transportation facilities, those interested in the organization being the asparagus and truck growers in the vicinity of Mullica Hill.

The bulletin also says that within a few weeks strawberries from Atlantic and Cumberland Counties will be ready for the northern markets and the officials of the railroads in South Jersey and other parts of the State have given the assurance that they will do everything possible to get this kind of fruit to the metropolitan and other markets as speedily as possible, but that wherever possible auto hauling of farm produce should be seriously considered.

SCRIPPS WINS HIS APPEAL.

President Grants the Publisher Deferred Draft Classification.

SACRAMENTO, May 13.—The appeal to President Wilson by James G. Scripps, newspaper publisher of San Diego, Cal., for deferred classification in the draft on the ground that he was engaged in work of military necessity, has been granted, according to a telegram received today by Governor William D. Stephens from Provost Marshal General E. H. Crowder.

Mr. Scripps applied for deferred classification, but the exemption board denied the application and placed him in Class 1. He appiled to the President, who ordered him placed in Class 4, Division D.

Ex-Sheriff Has Three Sons in Army.

When Wilbur Grifenhagen, 18 years old, enlisted in the army yesterday, he became the third son of ex-Sheriff Grifenhagen to enter the service. Herbert and Benjamin Grifenhagen, older sons, enlisted when the United States entered the war, and when the youngest son reached his eighteenth birthday last week he went to a recruiting office and volunteered. In answer to questions he replied that he had not consulted his parents and didn't have to, because under a bill just signed by the President a boy of 18 who is physically fit may be enrolled. He reported yesterday for duty at Fort Slocum.

NEWARK GIRL NURSE KILLED AT THE FRONT

Ministering to the Wounded on the Battlefield When She Was Struck Down.

ENGAGED TO BE MARRIED

Letters to Her Father Told of Dangerous Trips to First Emergency Dressing Stations.

That Miss Minnie E. Dewar, an American naval nurse, had given up her life on the battlefields of France when ministering to wounded on May 9, was disclosed late last night by a brief cablegram sent to her father, John Dewar of 870 Washington Avenue, Newark, N. J., by Dr. Ames, attached to United States Naval Base Hospital No. 1 in France.

A pathetic feature of the death of the nurse was the fact that two hours before he tore open the message telling of the killing of his only child Mr. Dewar had received a cheery letter from her, in which she announced her engagement to Lieutenant Arthur A. Winne, an Assistant Surgeon in the navy.

The only official news which Mr. Dewar had last night was the short wire: "Your daughter killed May 9 while attending to wounded."

From letters which she had written telling of her work, Mr. Dewar last night pieced together the circumstances under which she had been performing her duty. He said she had written that lately the nurses had been called on to perform hazardous work back of the lines. This had come about, she wrote, because of the constant shifting in trench positions and the many slight wounds that followed the taking over of new first-line positions.

Though, Miss Dewar wrote, the litter-bearers and ambulance workers ordinarily carried back the wounded from the trenches for surgical treatment, frequently nurses had to make trips up to the first emergency dressing stations with consequent danger.

Miss Dewar was 30 years old and was born and brought up in Newark. She entered the nurses' school attached to the Brooklyn Hospital, Raymond Street and De Kalb Avenue, from which she was graduated in 1914 and within several months she was made head nurse. Last September, when the Government issued a call for nurses and base hospital staffs, the Brooklyn Institution was one of the first to respond. Organized as the Brooklyn Hospital unit the nurses and staff were drafted into the Navy Department service and redesignated the United States Naval Base Hospital Unit 1. The unit reached France months ago and for a long time was stationed at Brest.

When the Brooklyn unit went over, Miss Dewar was selected to head the nurses. At the hospital last night sorrow was expressed over her death, and it was recalled that long before the United States entered the war she had often told how much she wished to get over and into the war.

John Dewar, the nurse's father, is connected with the Verona Chemical Company of Newark.

WOMEN KILLED IN THE WAR.

Estimated at 500,000 to 750,000 by Mrs. Inez Haynes Irwin.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Between 500,000 and 750,000 women have been killed in the war, according to Mrs. Inez Haynes Irwin, who spoke at the Washington headquarters of the National Women's Party tonight on "Women in the War Zone."

"These women owe their deaths to causes connected directly with the war," said Mrs. Irwin. "They have been killed in munition factories, have met with accidents directly behind the French and British lines have been killed by submarines, by bombs, and by other causes. This is the first war in which women have been mobilized as a sex behind their men in the fight, and the first time, therefore, they have been exposed to such risks."

Mrs. Irwin has recently returned with her husband, Will Irwin, the war correspondent, from an eleven months' stay in allied and neutral countries.

PASSAIC BANS GERMAN.

Board of Education Eliminates Course from High School.

PASSAIC, N. J., May 13.—By a vote of five to four the Passaic Board of Education decided tonight to eliminate the study of German from the local high school. The decision ended the agitation which certain organizations of Passaic have waged against the German language here.

Edwin Fowler, a New York business man and President of the board, voted to retain the study of German, as did Robert D. Benson, Dr. Paul Luck, and Alfred Ehrhardt. Those who voted for the resolution to abolish the German courses were: John H. Meaher, Ambrose Dean, Mrs. I. W. Sylvester, Dr. Robert R. Armstrong, and Kasper Krone.

BURN PAPERS IN SQUARE.

Poughkeepie Resents the American's Garbling of Proclamation.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., May 13.—As a protest against the manner in which The New York American handled President Wilson's Memorial Day proclamation, a party of Grand Army veterans this morning visited the local news stands and bought up every available copy of today's issue of The American. The papers were then carted to the public square, where, in the presence of nearly a thousand people, they were torn to bits and a match applied to the pieces.

The veterans were headed by Major Lewis C. Dietz, organizer of the local Loyal Service League; Captain Lewis C. Bevier, also of this city, and Judge John G. Harris of New Hamburg. Major Dietz explained the action by stating that it was done as a demonstration against The American for printing the proclamation in such a manner that reference to peace was left in, but allusions to prayers for victory were deleted.

"It is a dastardly, cowardly act," said Major Dietz, "and one that should receive the condemnation of every true American. It is a plain exposure of the man who is attempting to fool the people of this country by publishing articles that are perfectly agreeable to the Kaiser's Government and traitorous pro-Germans that are in this country."

Colonel H. B. Murray, Chairman of the G. A. R. War Committee here, said tonight that the committee would take some action in the matter.

ACCUSE WOMAN OF BRIBERY.

Man Also Charged with Paying Inspectors to Pass Barrack Bags.

Miss Isabel Feder, Vice President of the Acme Equipment Company, 114 Fifth Avenue, was arrested by agents of the Department of Justice yesterday on a charge of bribing Federal employes. Miebael Polsky, Superintendent of the plant, was arrested at the same time and on the same charge. The Acme Equipment Company, it was said, is filling several contracts for the Government, ono of them for a large number of barrack bags, which are used by soldiers to pack their belongings when ordered overseas.

It is charged that money was paid to Government inspectors to pass bags which were not up to the contract standards. The employes when approached, it is said, reported the matter to their superiors, and were ordered to take the money, the bribe being $25 in one case and $10 in another.

Miss Feder and Polsky were brought to the office of Charles W. DeWoody, Chief of the Department of Justice Bureau of Investigation, where they were questioned. They were then taken to Brooklyn and arraigned before United States Commissioner Cahoone, who held Miss Feder in $5,000 and Polsky in $2,000 bail for further examination. The Acme company is said to have in addition to a contract for 100,000 barrack bags, contracts for shirts and other articles of clothing for the Quartermaster Department of the army.

WIN POINT IN TROLLEY FIGHT

Objectors to Rise in North Jersey to Get Public Service Data.

The objectors to the proposed increase in trolley rates asked for by the trolley lines of Northern New Jersey won a victory yesterday. Chairman Donges of the Public Utility Board announced that the request made last week for certain data of the Public Service Electric Company, which had been refused by the company's engineer, was not unreasonable, and ordered it to be produced.

Governor Edge yesterday asked Commissioner Donges to continue as a member of the board until a decision was reached. It was understood that Mr. Donges planned to qualify as a Lieutenant Colonel in the army this week. Secretary Baker was appealed to by Governor Edge to permit Mr. Donges to remain away from his military duties for a few weeks.

EXPLOSION DARKENS HOTEL

Prince George's Engineer Is Hurt When Steampipe Bursts.

Guests at the Prince George Hotel were frightened last night when an explosion occurred and the lights went out in all parts of the hotel. It was found that a steampipe had exploded in the basement. Candles were lighted in the dining rooms and in the guest rooms.

Employes of the hotel later found that Duncan Weeks, assistant engineer of the hotel, who had sought to shut off the water from the broken pipe, had fallen into the hot water which covered the floor and had been seriously hurt. Paul Hertell, a guest, made an unsuccessful attempt to rescue him, but he finally was fished out by the Rescue Squad of the Fire Department. Weeks was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he was found to be suffering from internal injuries. The hotel was still in darkness at midnight.

SWIFT'S SON-IN-LAW MAY BE INTERNED

Presidential Warrant Issued for Count James Minotto as an Alien Enemy.

IS OUT ON $100,000 BAIL

His Efforts to Enter Naval Intelligence Bureau Led to Internment of Two German Associates.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Attorney General Gregory today authorized the issuance of a Presidential warrant for and the internment of Count James Minotto, under the President's proclamation relating to the internment of alien enemies.

Count Minotto is a son-in-law of Louis F. Swift, the Chicago meat packer, and has been under investigation by the Federal authorities since prior to last October, when he was arrested on the technical accusation that he was liable to become a charge when he entered this country. He has been under consideration by the Navy Department, the Department of Labor, and the Department of Justice.

In March the Department of Justice refused to deport him on the charges preferred by the Director of Naval Intelligence because of suspicions aroused by his German birth and associations, but dismissal of the arrest warrant was postponed until the Department of Justice should decide whether the Count could be interned as an enemy alien. Pending action by the Attorney General Count Minotto was permitted to remain at liberty on $50,000 bail furnished by his father-in-law.

Count Minotto is the man whose efforts to obtain a position in the Naval Intelligence Bureau led to the arrest of his associates, George von Seebeck and Fritz Kuhn in New York, and their internment as enemy aliens. Minotto came to the United States in 1914, arriving on the Campania on Aug. 22 in company with Kuhn and von Seebeck. Before his arrival here he was a representative of one of the largest German banks in London. His father claimed Italian parentage, his mother was a German. Count Minotto spent most of his life in Germany.

Soon after arriving in this country Count Minotto obtained employment with the Guaranty Trust Company of New York, and was sent by that company twice to South America.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 13.—Count James Minotto, son-in-law of Luis F. Swift, Chicago packer, who recently won his fight against deportation as an enemy alien, was arrested today on a Presidential warrant. He is still held under $50,000 bonds in that case, and was released by Judge George A. Carpenter of the United States District Court on additional bail of $50,000 pending the hearing next Monday of habeas corpus proceedings brought in his behalf.

The Count was taken into custody at the Swift country seat near Lake Forest as he was about to take a cross-country ride on horseback. For some time prior to his arrest servants had asserted that he was not there. Finally he was seen to emerge and was apprehended.

As soon as he was brought to the Federal Building in Chicago and taken to the United States Marshal's office, his father-in-law and Henry Veeder, chief counsel for the Swifts, and Edwin S. Sims, former District Attorney, appeared with the writ of habeas corpus, which was filed at once before Judge Carpenter.

"We take the position that Count Minotto, as an Italian, is a citizen of a friendly country, one of our allies, and is not an enemy alien," Attorney Sims told the court. "In that event he could not be held on a Presidential warrant alleging that fact."

While Mr. Veeder and Mr. Swift busied themselves signing the bond, the Count, apparently unperturbed, chatted nonchalantly.

"This will come out all right," was his confident declaration. "I regret very much that any further question as to my loyalty should arise. I was certain that the investigation of the Department of Labor fully exonerated me from having any but the most loyal feeling toward the United States and proved any rumors to the contrary to be without foundation."

Weaver, Mourned as Dead, Returns.

Alexander Watson, an expert silk weaver of Paterson, N. J., who had been thought dead for six months, walked into the home of his sister, Miss Anna Watson, on Central Avenue, Newark, yesterday, explaining that the report of his death was a mistake. Watson had been working as a clerk at the Salvation Army headquarters last December when the building caught fire and a dozen men were burned to death. Every one thought that Watson was among the dead, but he explained that he had gotten out and had gone to a farmer's house in Totowa, N. J., where he had been working since. He came to Newark yesterday to see his sister. Watson learned that his name had been read at a general funeral in Paterson for the victims of the fire, and that all his relatives had been convinced of his death. Watson spent yesterday startling his friends.

A. F. L. DINED IN COMMONS.

American Labor Delegates Also Received by Lloyd George.

LONDON, May 13.—Premier Lloyd George received the American labor delegation at Downing Street this afternoon.

The delegates were entertained at dinner at the House of Commons this evening by the General Federation of Trades Unions. The guests included George Nicoll Barnes, member of the War Cabinet; John Hodge, Minister of Pensions, and John Robert Clynes, Parliamentary Secretary to the Food Control Department. The Prime Minister wrote regretting his inability to attend.

After toasts to the King and President Wilson, Mr. Barnes proposed the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Barnes said that the present war was a war not only of armies in the field, but of nations and peoples, and must necessarily be waged by the labor parties in all the belligerent countries. That was the reason why the American Federation of Labor filled such an important rôle in the waging of the war on the American side. He especially welcomed America into the war—the great democratic people of the West—because the war could not have been waged without America.

FAKERS PROFIT BY WAR.

Practice Clairvoyance Among Soldiers' Relatives, Says Swann.

Women relatives of soldiers and sailors are being robbed of many dollars by a swarm of charlatans practicing clairvoyant tricks by which they pretend to bring "news" from the fighting men to their kindred and friends, said District Attorney Swann yesterday. He had his detective staff at work on several complaints he had received.

"These fakers, many of them not even acquainted with the ordinary devices used by the so-called fortune tellers, work upon the emotions of anxious mothers, wives, and sweethearts of the soldiers and sailors by pretending that they can exercise 'thought waves' which will insure the fighting men from all harm, for which fees ranging from 25 cents to $5 are exacted in each case," asserted Judge Swann.

Since the War Department adopted the rule of excluding the place of residence of a soldier mentioned in the casualty list these impostors have found a profitable field by pretending to establish the identity of any wounded soldier sought for by his relatives. The homes of many of the absent soldiers have been visited by the swindlers, where they created alarm and interest in their pretensions by various forms of insinuations of "mystic and magic" information of value to the women of the household.

Assistant District Attorney A. J. Talley, in directing a round-up of these swindlers yesterday, had several of the fakers before him who were alleged to have represented themselves "gifted with power to bring messages from the men at the front." After Detective Russo had listened to a pretended "wireless message" offered by a man at a spiritualistic meeting in an apartment in West Ninety-first Street, Russo arose from a corner and announced, "I have a message for you." He thereupon produced a warrant and arrested the man, who said he was J. J. Hill.

Mrs. Ellen O'Grady, Fifth Deputy Police Commissioner, and Mrs. Ada Brady and Mrs. Mary Sullivan, police women, are assisting the District Attorney in this work.

War Trade Board in Norway.

LONDON, May 13.—Referring to the trade agreement between Norway and the United States, the Morgen Bladet of Christiania, according to a dispatch to The Times from the Norwegian capital, says the Allies intend to establish in Christiania a sort of branch of the War Trade Board, to facilitate commercial transactions. The staff, it adds, will be installed in the American Legation, where representatives of British, French, and Italian commercial interests will confer.

"BLUE DEVILS" AT CAPITAL.

Received by President and Entertained on One-Day Visit.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—President Wilson, the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand, the Washington Red Cross, and French residents of the capital, today paid honor to the "Blue Devils" of France, who made a one-day visit here as guests of the Government. Each of the ninety visitors wore his War Cross.

President Wilson received the visitors this morning, and this afternoon the French High Commissioner, M. André Tardieu, gave a reception in their honor at the New Willard, with the French Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand to assist in receiving. M. Tardieu made a short speech of introduction, to which the Ambassador replied. Both speakers dwelt on the great work accomplished by France, congratulating this particular band of participants, and welcoming them to the United States, where much is hoped for from their example.

A sight-seeing tour by motor and a luncheon were attentions from the Red Cross.

ROCHESTER CAR STRIKE OFF

Men Agree to Return with an Increase in Pay.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 13.—The strike on the Rochester lines of the New York State Railways, which went into effect Saturday morning, to enforce a minimum wage demand of 40 cents an hour, came to an end this morning, and cars are again in operation.

It is understood the terms under which the men agreed to return to work provide for an increase of 4 cents an hour and that every regular run will be guaranteed ten hours a day. It is further understood that after the books of the company have been examined by auditors being brought here by the municipal authorities a six-cent fare is to be granted the company and some further concessions will be made to the men.

Upton Soldier Crushed by Train.

JAMAICA, L. I., May 13.—Crushed between train and platform while seeking to board a car before it had stopped while on his way back to Camp Upton after a leave of absence, J. G. Klvidinski, private in Co. A, 52d Engineers, received injuries early this morning resulting in his death a few hours later at St. Mary's Hospital. He was 26 years old and his home was in Chicago. The space was not wide enough for him to drop through and he was held as in a vise until his bones were broken.

EAST SIDE PEDDLERS SELL THRIFT STAMPS

Urge Patriotic Wares on Housewives and Obtain a Liberal Response.

CRY "HELP UNCLE SAM!"

Five Hundred Carts Are Enlisted in the Campaign, Which Will Be Continued Today.

The shrill cry of the Jewish peddler on the east side was never as piercing as it was yesterday when he appealed to the Jewish housewife who came to his cart to invest "one quarter—two quarters—three quarters" or more in the Thrift Stamps. Bearded Jews in long overcoats, immigrants who had found a refuge in this country from persecution, ran their carts up and down the streets in pursuit of customers, not to sell onions, potatoes, fish, and suspenders, as usual, but to sell Thrift Stamps.

"Help Uncle Sam!" they shouted. "Help the Government; help your children in the army. One quarter will buy a Thrift Stamp, sixteen Thrift Stamps will buy a War Savings Stamp. It's the best bargain in the world. It will buy food and clothing for your sons. It will buy justice and liberty."

About 500 carts crowded into the three blocks of Orchard Street between Delancey and Houston Streets, most of them discarding the wares they usually carried for great supplies of Thrift and War Savings Stamps. Flushed and enthusiastic for having been enlisted in a real patriotic endeavor, the peddlers concentrated all their powers of persuasion upon the task of praising their new wares to the housewives. They did it with such success that before the day was over several thousand dollars' worth of Thrift and War Savings Stamps were sold in this neighborhood.

To any visitor to the neighborhood who had known of it once as a hot bed of pacifist sentiment, the spectacle was a revelation of the extent to which even the poorest of the east side were eager to support the Government in the war against Germany. The peddlers' point of view on the subject was simple but logical. Here is what Simon Jaramovsky, from Kiev, a peddler of socks and suspenders, said when asked why he took the sale of Thrift and War Savings Stamps:

"Today I am not a peddler for myself. I am a peddler for the Government—and if I could afford it, I would be a peddler for the Government every day until the war is at an end. Why should I not be so? I have a boy at Yaphank—and he is helping the Government—and would be ashamed in me myself, if for one day I could not give up socks and suspenders for War Stamps. Don't I know what this war means? Don't tell me anything about it. It's terrible, but we got to end it quick. We can end it for good only if America wins. The Germans—we thought at one time that they were our friends—but look what they did to Russia. Friends, you call them. Thieves, robbers, murderers—enemies of mercy and humanity. Unless their armies are crushed the Germans will never be friends of the Jews or any one else. That's why today I'm a peddler for the Government."

While many of the carts devoted themselves exclusively to the sale of the stamps, others displayed them in addition to their regular merchandise, insisting, however, that every buyer, man, woman, or child, should carry away at least one Thrift Stamp with every purchase.

The drive in Orchard Street was conducted under the auspices of the Orchard Street Independent Association of which Jacob Margolis is President. Business houses abutting on Orchard Street joined in the campaign. The campaign on the east side will be continued today with the assistance of the East Side Pushcart Peddlers' Association.

WILSON SEES "OUT THERE."

Red Cross Play Opens Tour in Washington to $19,000.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—President and Mrs. Wilson and an audience made up largely of leaders in the social, official, and diplomatic sets witnessed the opening performance tonight at the New National Theatre by the all-star company in Hartley Manners's play, "Out There," for the benefit of the American Red Cross.

The cast of stage stars will tour the country in this play as its contribution toward the Red Cross drive for $100,000,000, which will be begun next week. As the value of tonight's house was nearly $19,000, many of the seats having been auctioned in advance by De Wolf Hopper, it is apparent that the venture will turn in a handsome sum to the Red Cross fund.

In the cast were Laurette Taylor, George Arliss, Chauncey Olcott, Julia Arthur, Helen Ware, Berri Mercer, H. R. Warner, James T. Powers, O. P. Heggie, James K. Hackett, George MacFarlane, and George M. Cohan.

At the conclusion of the play Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske delivered a Red Cross appeal written expressly for the occasion, and Mme. Eleanora de Cisneros sang verses from "The Star-Spangled Banner," "Rule Britannia," the "Marseillaise," and Garibaldi's "Hymn," while the national flags of the United States, England, France, and Italy were displayed.

months, and that eventually they must be met out of higher freight revenues.

Extensive Economies Planned.

An extensive scheme of economies to be effected by pooling, short hauls, elimination of competition and other new practices possible under Government management, is being developed slowly, but it is said that these will not begin to show big results in reports of expenses for almost another year. By that time it is planned to reduce rates if it is found possible to do so and still maintain the railroads in normal condition.

Mr. McAdoo has repeatedly expressed the opinion that the railroads under Government operation should be self-supporting. For this reason, he is represented as prepared to raise rates, and explain to shippers that, since prices of every other kind of service and materials have gone up, freight and passenger rates must be expected to follow.

It is contended that to raise passenger rates to 3 cents a mile will not reduce travel to any great extent, and the Director General is opposed to taking any radical steps to curtail passenger traffic. He has frowned upon proposals to follow Great Britain's example of raising passenger rates 50 per cent. and thereby cutting off considerable travel. Commuters' rates are likely to be affected to a less extent than others, and may not be raised. Railroads' reports for the first three months this year show that, although operating revenues were 6 per cent. greater than last year, operating expenses were 23 per cent. greater, and the net revenue from operations was only one-half of last year's.

The Director General has it in his power, acting as representative of the President, to put new rates into effect at any time without consulting the Interstate Commerce Commission, or he may apply to the commission for authority to change schedules if he wishes. His advisers in the Railroad Administration, however, are insistent that speedy action be taken to furnish the railroads new revenues, and it is considered probable that he will adopt the former course.

Mr. McAdoo, although still confined to his home by illness, has studied recommendations for rate increases and is expected to give the subject further attention when he returns to his office later this week. Most Railroad Administration officials are anxious for the new rates to be put into effect in June.

To ascertain exactly what improvements and extensions to railroads were being made, the Director General today ordered companies to report what projects were under way or planned, and whether adequate funds were available for the work.

EXPRESS WRECKED ON NEW YORK CENTRAL

Fireman Killed and Passengers Hurt in Accident at Schodack Landing.

SCHODACK LANDING, N. Y., May 13.—The Buffalo Express, from New York to Chicago, was wrecked here late tonight.

Albert Joslin, a fireman, was killed and a large number of passengers more or less seriously injured.

ALBANY, May 13.—One fireman killed, one passenger fatally injured, and eight or ten other passengers more or less seriously injured, was the result of the wreck of the Buffalo Express late tonight at Schodack Landing, according to officials of the New York Central Railroad. The engineer was badly scalded. Practically every car was derailed, it was stated.

A relief train was promptly made up here and left soon after word of the wreck had been received, carrying doctors and train officials. It was intended to bring the dead and injured here.

Reports from Schodack Landing were to the effect that the train was passing through the northern end of the village when the accident occurred. It was reported unofficially that an open switch caused the accident. The engine, which had just passed over the bridge across Schodack Creek was turned completely over and one car fell into the creek.

The Buffalo Express left the Grand Central Station last night at 8 o'clock. Known as No. 25, the train ran very heavy as regards equipment, being made up of Pullman sleepers throughout.

CAMBRIDGE CITIZENS LOSE.

F. D. Roosevelt Overrules Objections to Navy's Use of the Common.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., May 13.—The use of Cambridge Common as a site for barracks for Naval Radio School students is a matter of military necessity, according to Franklin D. Roosevelt, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who considered today a protest from citizens against the plan.

Mr. Roosevelt came here to attend a meeting of the Board of Overseers of Harvard University. When he reached University Hall he found a committee awaiting him, with a petition bearing 1,500 signatures, asking that some other location than the Common be chosen for the barracks.

Later the Secretary visited the common with the committee, accompanied by Rear Admiral Spencer H. Wood, Commandant of the First Naval District, and Lieutenant Commander Nathaniel F. Ayer, who is in charge of the Radio School. Other proposed sites also were visited, and at the conclusion of a conference Secretary Roosevelt issued a statement saying it would be necessary to make use not only of the Common, but also of land belonging to a private estate and part of the Andover Seminary grounds as well. At present more than 4,200 students are enrolled at the school.

"This is not merely a matter of finding enough land to put up quarters to house the men," said Mr. Roosevelt, "but additional land is necessary for school buildings and for drill and recreation purposes."

ASKS GOVERNORS TO AID.

Charles E. Hughes Urges Publicity for Italy-America Day.

Following the receipt of President Wilson's telegram, in which he agreed to become the patron of the nationwide celebration of Italy-America Day on May 24, Charles E. Hughes, the President of the Italy-America Society, sent the following telegram yesterday to the Governors of all the States and to the Mayors of eighty of the leading cities in the country:

For your information May 24, anniversary of Italy's entrance in war, will be celebrated throughout the United States as Italy Day. Every one will be asked to wear a flower and write to friends in Italy on that day as a sign of appreciation of what Italy has done. We will hold mass meeting in New York to express American friendship. The President of the United States has kindly consented to act as patron of the celebration. We hope that you will see your way clear to direct public attention to the celebration in your State. Kindly wire fully any action taken.

Francis H. Markoe, Chairman of the Flower Propaganda Committee of the celebration, called attention yesterday to the fact that this effort is unusual in the fact that nobody is asked to contribute money or to buy anything. Even the flowers, which it is hoped every man, woman, and child in the country will wear on that day, are being contributed and their distribution arranged for by the Society of American Florists.

Contests Miss de Peyster's Will.

The will of Miss Emily de Peyster who died Oct. 3 at 80 East Seventy-ninth Street, leaving an estate of $100,000 to relatives and friends, was contested in the Surrogate's Court yesterday by Myrtle Mortimer of 280 East 174th Street, who said she was a relative. The contestant alleges undue influence, and contends that the document was not executed legally. The chief beneficiary was William Moore Degnan de Peyster of 525 Park Avenue, who got $20,000.

AMERICANS WIN WAR CROSS.

Three Decorated, Including Lieut. H. R. Garside of New York.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY IN FRANCE, May 13, (Associated Press.)—Major Ralph Royce of Hancock, Mich.; First Lieutenant Herbert R. Garside of New York, and Lieutenant Paul Meyers of Milwaukee, Wis., were decorated with the War Cross by a French General today.

Major Royce, who is a graduate of West Point, was decorated for being the first American Army aviator to accomplish a reconnoissance flight over the enemy lines. Lieutenant Garside and Lieutenant Meyers were honored for successfully completing an infantry liaison mission over Apremont on April 12 at an altitude of 300 meters, where they were under constant and heavy machine gun fire from the ground.

Major Royce was especially mentioned in the citation for the successful direction of the air squadron he commands at the front.

DEFECTIVE AUTO KILLS TWO.

Driver Who Ran Down Children Admits Brake Was Broken.

After he had killed two children by running them down with his motor truck while he was going through Baxter Street, near Columbus Park, yesterday, Frank Russo, chauffeur, of 135 Avenue B, Newark, admitted to the police that his emergency brake had been useless for a week, and that he had neglected to have it repaired. The police found that part of the apparatus of the brake was tied to the running board, so that it would not drag on the roadway and that the brake was useless.

Russo was driving his heavy truck at moderate speed when he saw Luigi Giordano, aged 3, and his sister, Carmilina, crossing Baxter Street in the path of the machine, but he could not stop to avoid striking them. The wheels passed over both children and Luigi was killed instantly. Carmilini died in the Volunteer Hospital. A crowd gathered around the truck and extra policemen had to be called to take Russo safely to the Elizabeth Street Station. He was held on a charge of homicide.

Policeman Risked Life to Save Boy.

Policeman James Brill of the Sheepshead Bay Station risked his life yesterday afternoon to save a four-year-old boy from death under a Church Avenue trolley car in Brooklyn. The policeman was riding on the front platform of the car as John Bescher of 750 Thirty-ninth Street started across the tracks almost in front of his home. Brill leaned over the front of the car, grabbed the youngster by the side of the head, and threw him clear. The boy got only a couple of bruises. Brill, however, caught his foot in the gate, lost his balance, and fell. He was dragged about fifteen feet before the car was brought to a standstill. He refused medical aid, and went to his home.

German Hospital May Keep Name.

Members of the Board of Trustees of the German Hospital, at St. Nicholas Avenue and Stanhope Street, Brooklyn, announced at the end of their meeting last night that no action had been taken upon the proposal to change the name of the institution. J. Edward Stohlmann, the Superintendent of the hospital, who had made the proposal, said before the meeting that he expected much opposition. F. E. Heilmann, the President of the hospital, said that the proposal had not even been considered.

GABRILOWITSCH TO DETROIT

Pianist to Conduct City's Symphony Orchestra at $30,000 a Year.

Ossip Gabrilowitsch, the Russian pianist and conductor, is to lead the Detroit Symphony Orchestra next season at what Manager Harry Cyphers believes to be the highest salary yet paid to a symphony conductor. Mr. Cyphers at the Hotel Biltmore last night said that Mr. Gabrilowitsch, whom he saw at Bryn Mawr, Penn., earlier in the day, had agreed to the contract proposed by Detroit. This disposed incidentally of one of the four candidates for a similar post with the Boston Symphony, as yet unfilled.

Detroit's orchestra is now entering its fifth season, fostered hitherto mainly by home talent. It will be increased from sixty-five players to eighty-five, and its forty-odd home concerts augmented by forty more on tour in the West, the manager said. Mr. Gabrilowitsch, who reserves certain liberty to continue his piano concerts, has been reported as receiving the promise of $30,000 salary in Detroit.

Among the backers of its orchestra Detroit has not as yet enlisted Henry Ford, but it has been said that Horace E. Dodge of the Dodge Brothers bore part of the cost of famous soloists, including Galli-Curci and Kreisler, this year, and that the guarantee to Gabrilowitsch was to be underwritten by a group headed by David A. Brown. The acting President of the orchestra is Jerome H. Remick, and the concert master William Grafing King.

SEEK MOTORIST IN MURDER.

Pelham Manor Police Ask for Help in Apprehending Negro.

In their search for the negro burglar who murdered Policeman John Maguire on May 7 the Pelham Manor police last night sent out an appeal for assistance in finding an automobile owner who passed through the village after the murder and carried the negro to Lenox Avenue and 137th Street. The police are confident that the motorist did not know that the negro had committed a crime, and they have asked that the innocent chauffeur send to the police an accurate description of any negro who asked for a ride from Pelham Manor on the morning of the murder.

The driver of a taxicab from New Rochelle reported that he had seen the motorist pick up the negro, and says he saw the passenger alight at Lenox Avenue and 137th Street. The police promise to cause the motorist as little inconvenience as possible.

PARADE FOR MILK FUND.

Committee Conducts a Street Canvass with Military Escort.

The Committee to Obtain Free Milk for France, of which Miss Josephine Osborn is the head, opened its campaign for funds with a parade through the streets of New York yesterday. In the course of the parade $1,101.82 was collected with an uncounted pailful of pennies. Several men also pledged themselves to give sums of $10 to $20 a month for the fund.

The parade, consisting of two floats and an escort of soldiers and sailors, including a navy band, started from the First Field Hospital Armory at Sixty-sixth Street and Broadway and canvassed the city as far down as the Wall Street district. The money will be used to purchase powdered milk to be sent to France for the use of wounded soldiers, babies, and tubercular patients. The committee's drive will end on Friday.

Who Discovered RICORO?

"I know who discovered Ricoro," said the Paying Teller.

"Returning from lunch one day I met one of our messengers with a wallet of bills chained to his wrist.

"I was reaching for a cigar, when the messenger said, 'Try this brand, Sir!'

"I lit it. Its expensive look and flavor made me glance involuntarily at the wallet to see if the seals were intact.

"The messenger laughed. 'Don't worry, Sir! I've discovered Ricoro and so long as I can buy them for 7c the bank's funds are safe.'

"Since then I say 'Ricoro' every morning at the United Cigar Store near me."

Sooner or later you'll discover—

Ricoro
the "Self Made" Cigar

Saratoga size, 7c
Box of 50—$3.50
Imported from Porto Rico

There is no mistake about it—Ricoro is the greatest cigar value on the market today. Men who can well afford cigars at twice the price, have discovered in Ricoro an imported cigar of rich tropic fragrance and gentle mildness at less than the price of the usual domestic cigar.

A dozen sizes and shapes, from 6c to 2-for-25 cents.

YOU will receive in your second mail today a Hooven letter — it will be marked with a big "H."

This advertisement is intended to advise you that the "Hooven" letter is a circular letter, but not a "processed" letter.

There's no other way for you to know it, if we didn't tell you.

Because Hooven letters are typewritten on standard machines operated at high speed by electricity — and Hooven letters can be made just as personal as any dictated letter.

The only difference between Hooven machines and your own is: Hooven does the work all day long (some now running 24 hours a day) at 125 words a minute and—

No wasting of time to make corrections
No wasting of time to make erasures
No wasting of time to re-read

And the cost?—very little more than "processed" letters.

And the response?—8% to 60% as against 2% and less for the almost valueless "processed" letters intended to be personal.

In these days of high labor costs — high material costs, and 3c. postage, you require the Hooven machines for regular needs or the Hooven Service for occasional needs.

SEEK GERMAN CACHE FOR MUNITIONS HERE

State to Investigate Report That Enemy Has Military Supplies Hidden.

SIXTY WITNESSES CALLED

Million Rifles and Ammunition Said to be Stored in Various Parts of the United States.

Attorney General Morton E. Lewis, acting at the request of the Army Intelligence Service, will begin an investigation this morning to determine whether German interests in this country hold, in various parts of the United States, for German account 1,000,000 rifles, several thousand machine guns, and many millions of rounds of ammunition. The report that this vast amount of arms and ammunition is held secretly in this country for Germany has been current for more than three years and the investigation is expected to determine the truth or falsity of the reports.

More than sixty witnesses have been subpoenaed and the hearings will begin in the New York office of the Attorney General, 31 Chambers Street, at 10 o'clock this morning. They will be open to the public and the witnesses will include several of the best known lawyers in New York, one a former city official, and several persons who are supposed to know where the guns and ammunition are hidden. One of the most important witnesses, a man whose name figured in the ownership of a German controlled munition plant, had not been found last night by subpoena servers.

Deputy Attorney General Alfred L. Becker, who will question the witnesses, said last night that he would begin the inquiry with an open mind, not knowing whether there was any truth in the reports or not. Some reports, he added, had credited Germans with having a billion rounds of ammunition stored for a million Mausers. Others were that rifles once the property of the United States Government had been obtained by German interests through roundabout methods.

Before the United States entered the war Captain Hans Tauscher, who is the husband of Mme. Gadski, the opera singer, and who was aquitted of conspiracy to blow up the Welland Canal and later received a safe conduct to Germany, was reported to be actively engaged in purchasing munitions and storing them.

In February, 1916, he appeared at the New York District Attorney's office and asked that search be made for a broker who he said had disappeared after receiving money on a contract for cartridges. He alleged that the broker agreed to deliver 1,000,000 cartridges in February, 1916, and was paid $10,875 as part of the purchase price, but vanished without delivering the goods. In the absence of corroborating evidence, Chief Magistrate McAdoo refused a warrant.

In November, 1915, there were published reports that more than $500,000 worth of munitions had been stored in a New York loft and were being watched by Federal detectives who had been instructed to prevent their removal. Captain Tauscher was credited with having purchased them in Bridgeport, Philadelphia, and elsewhere.

Attorney General Lewis also announced yesterday that at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon he will resume the inquiry into the affairs of the Forstmann & Huffmann Company of Passaic, one of the largest woolen manufacturing concerns in this country. He said that the purpose of the new inquiry was to assist A. Mitchell Palmer, the Alien Property Custodian, in determining the extent of the German interests in this concern and to investigate certain transfers of stock which had been made from German to other interests alleged not to be German.

SOLDIER ACCUSES I. W. W.

Byra Says He Had Offer of Freedom from Draft.

CHICAGO, May 13.—An American soldier, John Byra of Franklin, N. J., testified at the trial of 112 Industrial Workers of the World today that a representative of the organization promised him and others protection from the authorities if they evaded the Selective Service act. Byra's testimony formed a link in the chain of evidence by which the Government seeks to prove that a nationwide conspiracy against America's war plans was entered into by leaders of the organization.

Private Byra testified that John Avilla, a defendant and organizer of numerous strikes in New Jersey, Massachusetts, and New York, while in Franklin furnished him a Boston, Mass., address. "He said to report at the address and I need have no fear of military service," said Byra.

Defense counsel sought to show that the testimony was part of a conspiracy against Avilla, which it was declared resulted in his being hanged by a mob in Franklin last Summer until he was nearly dead.

Parts of correspondence from Avilla to William D. Haywood and other officers relative to progress in strikes were read into the records.

Marie Copens, stenographer for Avilla at Boston, identified letters submitting his reports to Haywood. "When I was put out of Fall River a big fire broke out in the mills," Avilla notified Haywood early in 1917.

TAKE GERMAN OFF SHIP.

Chrambach, Arriving from Mexico, Held for Federal Investigation.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 13.—Federal agents today boarded a steamship from Mexico and arrested a member of the crew, who, they said, was Hans Ludwig Chrambach, brother of a Captain in the German Army and son of a Berlin bank President. Chrambach, it was stated, recently lived in Mobile, where he was known as H. L. Cramer. He carried a passport and registration card, each bearing the name of George Tacea.

Chrambach will be held pending further investigation by the Department of Justice. Chrambach, it was stated, came to the United States in 1912 from Germany, and spent considerable time in Baltimore, Philadelphia, Mobile and New Orleans.

The specific charge on which he is held is being within 100 yards of a wharf in violation of the President's proclamation.

LIMITS STAMP EXPORTS.

War Trade Board Grants Licenses for First-Class Mail Transmission.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The War Trade Board today announced that until further notice licenses authorizing the exportation of postage stamps, revenue stamps, and other stamps of similar character, either canceled or uncanceled, might be granted for transmission only by registered or first-class mails. The parcel containing the stamps must bear, plainly marked on the wrapper, the license number, the description of contents, and the name and address of the consignee, followed by the words: "In care of the Executive Postal Censorship Committee, 641 Washington Street, New York City."

The name and address of the consignor must also appear on the wrapper, and the postage must be fully prepaid to the country of final destination. Applications for licenses should be sent to the Bureau of Exports in Washington, or any of the branch offices of the War Trade Board. Postage stamps appear on the export conservation list of April 15, 1918, and since that date revenue stamps and other stamps of similar character, canceled and uncanceled, have been added to the list.

Other witnesses told of the Sergeant having invited persons to drink with him to the health of the German Emperor. Flentje denied the charges.

LOSES CITIZENSHIP FOR HIS WAR VIEWS

Ex-Postmaster of Clifton, N. J., Said He Didn't Want America to Win.

DECISION SETS PRECEDENT

Federal Judge Says Wusterbarth, After 36 Years, Still Shows Allegiance to Germany.

Setting a precedent that may affect thousands of naturalized Germans all over the United States, Federal Judge Thomas G. Haight at Newark yesterday cancelled the citizenship papers of Frederick Wusterberth, ex-postmaster at Clifton, N. J. Wusterbarth was alleged to have told Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and Liberty Loan workers who called on him that he didn't want America to win the war, and would do nothing to hurt Germany, his native land.

This is the first case of the kind in the country, according to United States District Attorney Charles F. Lynch. Wusterbarth became a citizen thirty-six years ago. The Government sought to revoke his citizenship papers on the ground of fraud, in that he swore falsely to obtain them. Carl Lente, his attorney, argued that his state of mind now couldn't prove his attitude when he became a citizen, but Judge Haight, in his opinion said:

"It appears without contradiction that the respondent, although a citizen of this country, on three separate occasions, (several months having intervented between each,) since the outbreak of the war with Germany, gave vent to expressions which clearly indicate that at this time he bears an allegiance to the country of his origin, superior to that which he recognizes to this country. While, of course, his present state of mind is not the main point in issue, yet if at the time the certificate of citizenship was granted to him he retained the same allegiance to Germany, as he manifestly now has, it is not contended, and indeed would not seem to be debatable, that any other conclusion could be reached than that the certificate had been procured by fraud, because the provisions of the naturalization act at the time required that before he could be admitted to citizenship he should declare on oath that he would support the Constitution of the United States, and that he absolutely and entirely renounced all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign sovereignty.

"It must be borne in mind that the respondent did not express any dissatisfaction with the aims and purposes of this country in the present war, or with the reason which had induced Congress to declare war, but that he boldly took the position that he would do nothing to injure the country of his birth, and did not wish this country to win the present war because of the ties which bound him to Germany.

"As the years succeeding his naturalization passed, coupled with the fact that he continued to dwell in our midst, associate with our citizens, receive the benefits which this country and its institutions have conferred upon him, acquire property, and hold public office, it is natural to presume that his affection and loyalty to this country would increase, and that any ties which bound him to the country from which he came would correspondingly decrease. If, therefore, after thirty-six years, he now recognizes an allegiance to the sovereignty of his origin superior to his allegiance to this country, it seems to me that it is not only permissible to infer from that fact, but that the conclusion is irresistible, that he took the oath of renunciation with a mental reservation to the country of his birth. Indeed, for the reasons just stated, his allegiance then must have been stronger."

NO MORE SPECIAL SHERIFFS.

Knott Says Badges Have Been Used Improperly.

Sheriff David H. Knott announced yesterday that he will appoint no special deputy sheriffs during his term of office. He said that while there have been reasons in the past for the appointments of special deputies, who serve without pay and are merely subject to call for special duty, the abuses incident to the use of the badge given to appointees had grown so serious that the evil outweighed the good. The Sheriff referred to the fact that a former Sheriff (the late Julius Harburger) appointed 2,500 special deputies.

Sheriff Knott said he had been influenced by the fact that badges of special deputies had been used at doors of theatres and motion picture shows, fire lines, and even at subway and elevated stations, while cases had been reported in which collectors for installment houses had used them to intimidate poor persons into making payments under threats of arresting them.

JEWS TO PRAY FOR VICTORY.

Rabbis Call Upon Their Congregations to Observe May 30.

A call to all orthodox congregations in the Jewish faith to observe May 30 as a day of prayer and fasting in accordance with the proclamation of President Wilson was sent out yesterday after a meeting of the Union of Orthodox Rabbis at 121 Canal Street. The call was signed by Rabbis Moses S. Margolies, Solomon E. Jaffe, Israel Rosenberg, and other orthodox Jewish clergymen.

It was said that the call meant that the rabbis of all orthodox congregations in the United States and Canada would open all the synagogues for prayer, and that the members would be required to fast as if it were a holy day under the customs of the religion. The call urged also that prayers be offered for the speedy success of American arms, and a near and just peace.

Soldier Hurt in Bayonet Drill.

One artilleryman at Fort Hamilton was slightly injured yesterday by a bayonet thrust from the "enemy" while rehearsing for the "over-the-top" combat which is to be one of the features of the Red Cross lawn fête at the post Friday. The accident resulted from a defect in one of the dummies which represent the Germans in the trench attack. When the soldiers rushed over the top yesterday this dummy jumped prematurely from the trench and bayoneted the soldier before he had time to defend himself.

INQUIRY INTO CAR ACCIDENTS

Servlee Board to Find Reason for Recent Increase in This City.

The Public Service Commission announced yesterday that it would begin on Friday an investigation into the many traction accidents that have recently occurred at various places in the city, and that special attention would be paid to the Union Railway lines, where one person was killed and several seriously injured a few days ago.

The purpose of the inquiry is to determine whether the cars, equipment, appliances, service, regulations, and practices of the various companies are of such character as to insure safe, proper, efficient, and adequate service. The order authorizing the inquiry also directs that witnesses be interrogated to discover "whether the methods, organization, and facilities of the companies in respect to the inspection, repairs, and maintenance of cars used and the tracks and roadways over which they are operated are in all respects proper, sufficient, and adequate, and what would be proper, sufficient, and adequate methods, organization, and facilities."

An attempt is also to be made to discover just what changes should be made in the management of the companies and in the operation of cars which would "promote the security or convenience of the public, in order to secure adequate service or facilities for the transportation of passengers or property."

Police Promotions Announced.

The promotion of four police Sergeants to the grade of Lieutenant and their transfer was announced by Police Commissioner Enright yesterday. The men who were the next in order on the eligible list were Dominick Hooks, who was transferred from the East Fifty-first Street Station to the Mercer Street Station; Louis Vetter, Jr., from Clinton Street to West Thirtieth Street; Frank H. Morrie, from High Bridge to West 100th Street, and William J. File, from Madison Street to West Forty-seventh Street.

Lieutenant File was in the lobby of the Hotel Metropole at the time Herman Rosenthal was called from the hotel to the street and shot. When File heard the shots he ran out and pursued the murderers, who were speeding away in an automobile, firing several shots.

The Hampton Shops and Country House Decoration

THE first joyous breath of Spring is apt to call up a memory of some Georgia Country House with its cheery Breakfast or Morning Room, through whose tall casemented windows the blithe sunlight falls on well-polished Mahogany, gleaming Silverware and colorful Porcelains.

To make this into a reality all that is needed is a visit to the Hampton Shops whose spacious Galleries are graced with nicely arranged groupings of the very Furniture, and its accompaniments, of which such houses are in need; and whose Decorators, from long and intimate experience, can surround these pieces with the very tones and shadings which will make them seem at home.

MUST SERVE 30 YEARS FOR DISLOYAL REMARKS

Camp Devens Sergeant Said Wilson Wasn't Big Enough for His Job and Our Soldiers a Joke.

AYER, Mass., May 13.—Ernest Flentje of Cambridge, a Sergeant in Company F, 301st Infantry, at Camp Devens, was sentenced today to thirty years' imprisonment at Fort Jay, N. Y., for unpatriotic utterances. He was arrested at the cantonment on March 28 and tried by court-martial.

Witnesses at the trial testified that Flentje had said President Wilson was incapable of standing the responsibilities put upon him by the war; that this country had no business entering the war, and that Germany could have won if the United States had kept out.

Referring to the 76th Division here, witnesses said he declared that "if the German Army ever saw 'this bunch' they would laugh themselves to death."

TIGERS ARE DOWNED BY CALDWELL'S HIT

Veteran Yankee Pitcher Doubles as Pinch Batter, with Bases Full, in Sixth Inning.

ERROR MAKES GAME CLOSE

Pipp Juggles Ball While Cobb Races Around Bases, but New York Wins by 3 to 2.

Just when the Detroit Tigers were going through all the motions of celebrating a victory over the Yankees at the Polo Grounds yesterday Ray Caldwell suddenly popped out of the players' dugout grasping his big black bat. All the civilians, soldiers, and sailors began to yip and yell and Eric Erickson, the Detroit flinger, began to shake at the knees. The tall telegraph operator jumped into the breach, as he has done before, and sent forth a two-bagger which propelled a pair of runs over the plate, and the Yanks won the ball game, 3 to 2.

It was that good, old-fashioned gameness, which fans like to see in a ball club, that Huggins and his lads showed in that seething sixth inning. There were two out and the bases jammed when Caldwell came forth as a rescuer, and Erickson fooled him with two strikes before Caldwell cracked the ball amidships and sent it hopping along the right field foul line.

It was one of those tense moments when the populace is all het up and forgets to breathe. Soldiers, sailors, and civilians gazed pop-eyed at Caldwell as he waited for that third strike. Up jumped everybody on their toes and warbled until they were blue in the face at Caldwell's wicked whang.

It was the first day of Colonel Ruppert's new arrangement of entertaining all the boys in blue and khaki as his guests, and it was a joyful wash-day afternoon for all of them. More than 2,000 of them were scattered throughout the stands and the jackies and doughboys regarded it as about the best possible way for them to enjoy an off-day that has been suggested to them yet.

Pipp Puts Yanks in Trouble.

A double-barreled error by Wallie Pipp in the opening chapter had made it possible for the Tigers to corral a couple of runs, which looked mighty big until the sixth inning happened along. Frank Baker was the first New York citizen up in the sixth, and he smote the ball over Harry Heilmann's roof in right field for three bases. The ball bounded up close to the top of the wall in front of the right field stand and with a few more inches lift it would have carried the stockade. Baker pulled up at third and there was a feeling in the air that the Yanks were about to introduce a few moments of crowded excitement.

Del Pratt hoisted a fly to Bobby Veach in short left field and Baker made a bluff attempt to shoot for home after the catch, but it was only a bluff, for he knew all about that strong right arm of Veach's. Baker showed the right kind of patience and stuck to the bag. Pipp was too anxious to send the ball out of the park and Erickson struck him out.

Two gone and a man on third did not look any too encouraging, but Wee Miller Huggins, coaching at first, began to exhibit a lot of confidence, which was picked up by the players and spectators. Ping Bodie laced a bouncer at Donie Bush, and Donie did something which is rather unusual for him. He bobbled the ball and then threw poorly to first, Ping being safe, while Baker crossed the plate.

Armando Marsans, who for so long was delayed in transmission from Cuba, had previously made one of the few hits credited to the Yanks and this time he soaked the ball between first and second. Dressen knocked the ball down, but not in time to prevent the Cuban perfecto from getting a hit. Truck Hannah ambled up to the plate ready and willing to do something for the cause, but Erickson was plainly troubled at the sudden turn of affairs and he handed Truck a pass. This hardly left breathing space on the bases. Manager Huggins then gave the high sign to Caldwell, and Slim was as cool as an Eskimo.

Caldwell Decides Issue.

After Slim had fouled a few and was facing the trying ordeal of two strikes against him, he leathered the ball on a wild trip through Dressen along the right field foul line. Bodie and Marsans hot-footed it across the plate, and Hannah halted at third. These two tallies put the Yanks in the lead, and the fact that Gilhooley popped to Young was overlooked.

There were two gone in the first inning when Ty Cobb faced Russell, and the Georgia Gem would have been an easy out ordinarily and the side retired, but Pipp was a bit too sure, and when Cobb's roller came at him, he handled it as if it was a hot potato. He was badly frustrated when Cobb rounded first like an express train. Pipp picked up the ball after several foolish attempts, and made a wild heave to second, Cobb landing safely at the second pier.

Veach sent a hot hit through second and Cobb scored. Veach went down on a passed ball, and when Heilman smashed a single to left, Veach counted with the Tigers' second run. The afternoon was a sad matinée for Attorney Hughey Jennings's troupe of maulers, for the defeat shoved them down into the melancholy recesses of last place. Even Bill Donovan lost his smile.

BROWNS AT BUSH'S MERCY.

St. Louis Uses 17 Men in Vain Attempt to Down Red Sox.

BOSTON, May 13.—St. Louis used seventeen men today, but Boston, with Bush pitching, made it two out of three, winning by the score of 7 to 5. In the first inning Boston made three runs off Sothoron, when Shean, Strunk, Whitman, McInnis, and Thomas hit safely in succession.

Boston shifted its lineup, McInnis going to first base for the first time this year and Thomas, last year with Providence, playing third. Scott's all-around play was sensational.

White Sox Fail to Hold Early Lead and Athletics Win.

PHILADELPHIA, May 13.—Chicago knocked Myers out of the box in the first inning today, but Adams and Geary, recruit pitchers, held the world's champions safe thereafter, and the Athletics batted Danforth for a victory by 6 to 4.

Walker's hitting featured. He drove a home run into the bleachers in the first inning and hit safely on his other three times up. Adams held Chicago hitless until J. Collins drove a home run into the bleachers in the sixth, scoring a runner ahead of him.

Eddie Collins returned to the game and walked the first three times up.

GRIMES DELIVERS GAME TO MATTIES

Brooklyn Twirler So Wild That Reds Gather Seven Runs in First Two Innings.

CINCINNATI, May 13.—Burleigh Grimes was so wild in the first two innings of the game between Cincinnati and Brooklyn here today that all the local batsmen had to do was to wait patiently for a pass to first. Most of them did this most successfully. The exceptions to the patient home players were Lena Blackburne and Sherwood Magee.

Blackburne disdained any such trip to first. Instead, he cracked the ball on the seam and chased two runners over the plate with his double. Magee added misery to the lot of Grimes by driving out a triple, which, with the aforementioned passes, gave the home team a lead of seven runs when the second inning ended. That was all the Matties got.

Marquard and Cheney took up the burden where Grimes left off, and stopped the Reds for the rest of the day, but the damage had been done, notwithstanding the Dodgers kept plugging along and managed to send five runs over the plate, all of which were earned. Fred Toney, the star of the local staff, was driven to cover, but Bressler checked the onrush of the Dodgers and was credited with winning the game.

RAIN STOPS MOUND BATTLE.

Oeschger and May Forced to Abandon Duel with Laurels Even.

ST. LOUIS, May 13.—Rain, which had been intermittent throughout the game, caused a halt at the end of the tenth inning of today's game between Philadelphia and St. Louis. The score was 3 to 3. It was a pitchers' duel between Oeschger and May, the former allowing only two hits. These came in the first inning, one of which, a home run by Cruise, with two men on, gave the locals their runs.

SCHUPP'S ARM IS TREATED.

Bonesetter Reese Discovers Ailment of Young Pitcher.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURGH, May 13.—Ferdie Schupp, the Giants' youthful southpaw, whose pitching arm has been troubling him all Spring, paid a visit to Bonesetter Reese in Youngstown, Ohio, today. The specialist, after a close examination of the arm, found that the young pitcher had pulled a tendon close to the shoulder. He snapped the tendon back into place and ordered Schupp to refrain from pitching at least a week, after which he said the arm would be as good as ever.

Schupp reported last week that the injured arm felt a trifle better than it had, but he hurt it anew in an exhibition game at Akron yesterday.

Roller Skaters Race Tonight.

The fourth of the series of weekly roller skating races will take place tonight at the St. Nicholas Rink, and will bring out a large field of starters in both the one-mile amateur and the two-mile professional events. These speed tests are increasing in popularity each week as a result of the keen competition among the various stars, as was evidenced last week by the defeat of A. R. Englington, the Eastern champion.

LANIUS GALLOPS TO FORE.

Widener's Preakness Candidate Shows Speed in Trial.

PIMLICO, Md., May 13.—George D. Widener's Lanius had a more than satisfactory public trial for the Preakness Stakes, to be run on Wednesday, when he turned out this afternoon in the Southern Handicap for three-year-olds and upward at a mile and won galloping from a field that contained not a little class. What made the test more convincing was that Harry Payne Whitney started his two Preakness candidates—Flags and Johren—the pair being installed as favorites because they had raced previously this season, while Lanius was making his début for 1918.

The veteran trainer, A. J. Joyner, had, however, carefully prepared Mr. Widener's imported horse, and he ran in a manner that shows he is thoroughly wound up for the big $15,000 contest on Wednesday. Flags got away in the lead, but maintained it only on sufferance, for, as soon as Lanius was let down, he shot to the front.

Afterwards it was just a gallop for the son of Llangibby and he breezed past the finishing post seven lengths in front of Flags, with Johren a length further back. Lanius carried 112 pounds and was conceding weight to both the Whitney horses.

WEIGHTS FOR HANDICAP OUT

Omar Khayyam and Cudgel to Carry 130 Pounds in Kings County Event.

Handicapper Walter S. Vosburgh has paid a high compliment to August Belmont's Hourless in the allotment of the weights for the Kings County Handicap, which will be run next Saturday at Jamaica over a mile and a sixteenth course. These weights have been anxiously awaited by racegoers, as the handicap provided the first opportunity for Mr. Vosburgh to give his estimate of the abilities of the cracks, which as three-year-olds last season, produced such sensational racing. Hourless is honored with the position at the head of the list with 132 pounds, and the son of Negofol is asked to concede two pounds to his great rival, Omar Khayyam, and the Western wonder, Cudgel.

The Belmont crack will have no chance to prove that the handicapper has rightly judged his worth, as he has been retired to the stud, but there is every chance that Omar Khayyam and Cudgel may fight their Pimlico battle over again. Mr. Viau will no doubt wish to show that his champion was a little short of work, while Cudgel's owner, J. K. L. Ross, may like to take advantage of the chance to defeat Omar Khayyam on even terms.

The all-round excellence of last season's crop of three-year-olds is attested by the fact that four of them, now four-year-olds, are at the top of the list, giving weight to the older handicap performers. Few three-year-olds of class are entered for the Kings County, but of these last year's two-year-old champion, Sun Briar, is rated best with 112 pounds to carry.

The weights follow:

KINGS COUNTY HANDICAP.—For three-year-olds and upward, by subscription of $50 each, starters to pay $100 additional, guaranteed cash value $5,000; one mile and a sixteenth. Hourless, 132 pounds; Cudgel, 130; Omar Khayyam, 130; Westy Hogan, 127; Stromboli, 127; Thunderer, 124; Spur, 122; Campfire, 121; Rickety, 110; George Smith, 119; Borrow, 118; Kalitan, 115; Ticket, 114; Sun Briar, 112; Walnut Hall, 111; Diamond Rock, 110; Old Koenig, 110; Stargazer, 109; Manister Toi, 108; Bally, 108; Tumbler, 107; Achilles, 107; Wistful, 107; Bella Desmond, 106; Gex, 106; Straight Forward, 105; Naturalist, 105; Fitzwilliam, 105; Philippic, 105; Lanius, 105; High Cost, 104; Flittergold, 103; Priscilla Mullens, 103; Bellringer, 102; Mr. Ned, 102; Drastic, 100; Top Coat, 100; Bully Boy, 100; Daddy's Choice, 100; Woodstone, 100; Recount, 100; King Neptune, 99; Turf, 98; Enfilade, 98; Green Gold, 97; Greek Legend, 95; Reveler, 97; Jusqu'au Bout, 95; Bantry, 95; Heredity, 93; Trophy, 92; Common Law, 92; Shanballymore, 90.

ONE-ARMED PLAYER VICTOR AT TENNIS

H. R. Hathaway Plays in Harlem Open Tourney in Impressive Style.

Heretofore there have been few one-armed tennis players of prominence. In fact, about the only tournament contestant in the big events has been W. D. Burden, and his activities have been confined mostly to the tournaments held in Newport. Another recruit, however, made his appearance in the third round of the Harlem open tennis tournament yesterday—Harrison R. Hathaway—and he scored an impressive victory over Sigmund Spaeth in straight sets at 6—3, 6—3. It was Hathaway's first appearance in the tournament, for his second match was to have been against Ward Dawson, and this went to Hathaway by default.

Hathaway's type of play differs markedly from that employed by Burden. The latter tosses the ball into the air with his racquet preparatory to playing his service stroke, while Hathaway, grasping the ball and racquet in his hand, throws the ball high over his head and gets a fairly severe service, which is usually accurate. His game is essentially of the net variety, and he displayed some pretty volleying in his triumph over Spaeth, who was frequently outplayed in the rallies at the barrier. Hathaway is also fast on the court and his well-sustained play may make him a formidable rival in some of the tournaments this season. His next match is against J. S. O'Boyle, formerly of Georgetown. A victory in this would give Hathaway a place in the semi-final round.

Two other players advanced to the round before the semi-finals in yesterday's competition. They were Henry Bassford and Herbert L. Bowman. The former triumphed over T. B. Keene at 6—1, 6—1, and Bowman disposed of E. J. Clapp in straight sets at 6—3, 6—3.

The victory of Bowman over Clapp was rather surprising. Clapp is a proficient wielder of the racquet and was one time a member of an intercollegiate doubles champion team. His best game was, however, far from his call yesterday. There were many errors committed, some of them inexcusable on the part of an experienced player, and they counted heavily in deciding the issue in favor of Bowman. Now and then Clapp flashed some pretty passing shots across, but there was no dependability either as to his ground strokes or his overhead work.

Clapp gave indications of a rally in the last set, but the effort came too late to be of real avail. When Bowman lacked only the match point and was leading at 40—0 on his own service Clapp came to the fore with a nice assortment of strokes that secured for him the game, and he took the next game on his own service. In the ninth game Bowman succeeded in establishing his right to an advanced bracket.

The scores:

First Round.—A. S. Von Bernuth defeated H. C. Evans, 6—2, 7—5.

Second Round.—Paul Martin defeated H. Gilbraith, 6—1, 3—6, 6—1; A. S. Von Bernuth defeated B. Landau, 7—5, 6—1.

Third Round.—H. R. Hathaway defeated Sigmund Spaeth, 6—3, 6—3; Henry Bassford defeated T. B. Keene, 6—1, 6—1; H. L. Bowman defeated E. J. Clapp, 6—3, 6—3.

Brown's Errors Too Plentiful to Check Dartmouth.

Special to The New York Times.

HANOVER, N. H., May 13.—Rain stopped the Dartmouth-Brown game this afternoon in the fifth inning with the Green ahead by a 5-to-1 margin. The runs for Dartmouth were the result of loose fielding on the part of the visitors, mixed with a few safe hits.

LE COCQ WILL RACE HERE.

California Driver to Compete in Harkness Handicap Auto Event.

Another newcomer to Eastern automobile racing circles last night entered the Harkness Handicap, the feature 100-mile race to be held at the Sheepshead Bay Speedway on Decoration Day. He is Louis Le Cocq, considered one of the best young drivers ever produced on the Pacific Coast. He comes here highly recommended by Barney Oldfield, the veteran Californian, who will also face the starter in the big handicap.

Besides Oldfield and Le Cocq, other start drivers already entered are Louis Chevrolet, speedway champion of 1917; Dario Resta, speed king of 1915-1916; Ira Vail, the 22-year-old Brooklyn champion; Omar Toft, the Pacific Coast sprint champion, and Arthur Duray, the European champion, who is coming from France for the Memorial Day classic.

Promoter William H. Wellman is anxious to get Ralph De Palma into line, but as yet the sprint champion of 1917 has given no intimation of his plans for the coming season.

Rally in Ninth Wins for Berkeley.

A last inning rally gave the Berkeley-Irving School baseball team a victory over the Ethical Culture School nine in a loosely-played game yesterday at Central Park, by the score of 8 to 4. The contest went seven innings, and when they came to bat for their last time the Berkeley-Irving players were behind in the score at 4 to 1.

TELLS HOW ANARCHY IS SWEEPING RUSSIA

Lady Muriel Paget Says Mob Rule Obtains in Most of the Cities.

VOTED THERS IS NO GOD

Prayer Book Changed to Include "Peace on Earth Without Indemnities."

Lady Muriel Paget, organizer of the Anglo-Russian Hospital, which in two years cared for enormous numbers of wounded on the eastern front, arrived in New York yesterday on her way back to England. She left Kieff on Feb. 22 with a Red Cross party and a group of Russian governesses, the usefulness of the hospital in Russia having ended with the cessation of hostilities.

"Things in Russia have been getting worse," she said, "and present conditions present a picture of almost incredible anarchy. But I hope that the Allies will stand by Russia and will be ready to aid her cordially and with good-will whenever she asks for help. That is the only way to counteract the German influence that is everywhere prevalent.

"Today nothing can be relied on in Russia except the power of fear and occasionally that of money. Just before I left the country it was believed that the Germans would be in Moscow in a few days. For a long time before, the porters, janitors, and servants had been surly and overbearing, and had refused to work; but on the report that the Germans would soon arrive they began to do their work again, and were once more respectful. They appeared to feel instinctively what the Germans would make them do.

"Our hospital at Petrograd—we had two field hospitals and a motor ambulance train besides—was much disorganized when I returned to it in June, 1917, after a six months' stay, because it was being managed by a committee of orderlies. The rule of committees was the general Bolshevist practice and often it had strange workings. One of our hospital orderlies, for instance, was a very skillful carpenter, and consequently did all the repair work. The committee, however, decided that this was favoritism, so they brought him back to cleaning windows and scrubbing floors, and the carpentry had to go undone.

Decided There Was No God.

"Stories of the revolutionary changes made by committees were heard everywhere. On one of the ships of the Black Sea fleet a committee was formed to decide whether or not there was a God. They deliberated, heard both sides of the argument, and finally pronounced the judgment that there was no God; and the Chaplain was accordingly dismissed. At another place a committee was appointed to revise the prayerbooks of the Church. For the phrase 'Lord God,' they substituted 'President God of the Heavenly Republic,' and they made the Christmas service read, 'Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace without annexations and indemnities, and good will to man.'

"There is a marvelous simplicity and unconcern about the Russians. On a tramcar in Petrograd one of the passengers was caught in the act of picking another passenger's pocket. A committee was formed which promptly found him guilty and bound him hand and foot. When the tramcar came to the Neva the committee stopped it, took the thief off, and threw him off the bridge into the river; then the car started up again, and the conversation went on undisturbed.

"On the streets a well-dressed person is sure to be held up and compelled to give up coat or shoes at the point of the revolver. A friend of mine was met by a robber who demanded his fur coat; but he had the wit to plead that he had just stolen it himself that morning, and left it to the robber's sense of justice if he should not be allowed to enjoy it for a while. This seemed fair enough, so he was permitted to go his way still in possession of the coat.

"Another friend was compelled to give up his coat, but in this case the robber was amenable to the plea that a man without an overcoat would be terribly cold. 'Very well,' he said, 'you may have mine.' It was not a very presentable garment, but the man who had been compelled to take it in exchange felt better when he got home and found in the pockets 600 rubles, apparently the proceeds of previous hold-ups.

Disorganization Is General.

"The general disorganization is hard to realize. In Kieff there were 10,000 refugee officers, and in Odessa 11,000—formerly men of means and position, now reduced to earning their living by any sort of work they could get, driving street cars, selling matches, anything. While I was staying at a hotel in Odessa the Bolsheviki sailor, who was at that time commander of the Black Sea fleet came one evening to call on his sweetheart, a kitchen maid."

Lady Muriel was in Kiev during the fighting between the Rada and the Bolsheviki which ended in the capture of the town by the latter.

"There were French, British, and American Red Cross and military missions there at the time," she said, "all gone in from the southwestern front to do what we could to counteract the German propaganda. When the Rada began to talk of a separate peace these missions all filed a formal protest, and this was very probably the means of saving our lives later. For when the Bolsheviki captured the town they were at first ill-disposed to us, thinking that we had aided the Rada. The evidence of this protest, filed among the archives, led them to change their attitude. The members of the foreign missions were treated with respect by both sides during the fighting that preceded the capture of the town, but we were fortunate in escaping serious loss from shell fire. During the eight days' fighting about 10,000 three-inch and six-inch shells fell in the city, and there were something like 8,000 casualties among the civil population.

Shot 2,600 Officers.

"The most pitiful thing, however, was the case of the refugee officers whom I have mentioned. Before the Bolshevist attack the Rada had threatened these men with death if they refused to attach themselves to its side. They protested that they wanted to go on with the war against the Germans, and the Rada finally made them some sort of promise that lessened their suspicious attitude. But they did not take sides; the matter had gone no further than enrolling them all and giving them passes to go about the city when the Bolsheviki attacked. After Kiev was captured the Bolsheviki found this list, and purely on the strength of it they hunted down some 2,600 of these officers and had them shot. It was pitiful to see them marching very gallantly to their fate, their last salute coming from British officers who saw the procession passing in the street.

"At the time there seemed to be a good deal of antipathy between the Germans and Austrians, and it was generally felt that the Austrians were backing the Rada and the Germans the Bolsheviki. German propaganda, however, was everywhere, in every town, on every train. It was impossible to escape its influence, and it was certainly responsible for a very great deal of the trouble. But the Ukrainian peasants were burning their grain rather than let the Germans get it, and I think they will remain unyielding in their hostility to the enemy."

Lady Muriel expressed great admiration for the Queen of Rumania, whom she had last seen at Christmas time, and expressed the opinion that she would never desert her country.

"Lonesome Like" and "The Home of the Free" have survived "Salome" at the Comedy Theatre. Oscar Wilde's tragedy was last night replaced by two one-acters from local talent, and the result was a bill in the more usual manner of the Washington Square Company. Both of the new pieces have already been given by the Provincetown Players.

In "The Rope," Eugene O'Neill, while still keeping in sight of the sea, departs from the virile if broken sea characters of "Bound East for Cardiff" and "In the Zone." We have here a study mainly of landsmen and degenerates. The play opens with the crooning and gibbering of an idiot child, and progresses to the senile dementia of her grandfather. The other characters are harsh, sordid, and jarring, with a single roystering and thieving sailor lad to lend the touch of salt-sea frankness.

The central figure is the grandfather, a queer but not unconvincing blend of libertine, pietist, miser, and benefactor. The rope of the title is a noose which he has suspended in the barn, with the amiable intention that his son, the sailor lad, shall hang himself in it when he next returns from the sea. What his precise motive may be is not quite clear, except that it is mad. The son is so shocked when he discovers the reception planned for him that he sets about robbing the old man of his hoard. But the idiot daughter attempts to swing on the rope with her hands and a bag of gold tumbles upon her, which she scatters by handfuls in the sea. So perhaps, after all, the old man meant to be quite generous with the sailor boy.

The play has the vigor of all Mr. O'Neill's sketches, but it lacks the singleness and bigness of motive which distinguishes his work at its best. The performance was chiefly remarkable for the acting of Whitford Kane as the demented old man.

It was as far as the poles asunder from the dull and kindly young machinist which he gives us in "Lonesome Like," but it was equally vigorous in conception and subtle in execution. Mr. Kane is an actor among a thousand, having the very rare combination of a richly colored artistic individuality and extreme range in character assumptions.

"Close the Book" is one of Susan Glaspell's satires on the pose of freedom which is supposed to be rampant among our young folk. The heroine believes herself of Gypsy parentage, and comes near to upsetting a New England college town with her talk of an open life and the open road. But her inflation is punctured quite when she learns that her parents were of unimpeachable respectability.

The general idea of the play has done service several times in the comedy of Washington Square; but it is passably well handled and the lines are bright. Owing partly to the greater amplitude of the stage of the Comedy, the performance was superior to that of the Provincetown Players. Helen Westley was admirable as the hero's grandmother, making the most of every touch of comedy. Marjorie Vonnegut lent the vivid freshness of her personality to the part of the sister.

Dana Wingate Dies at Saranac.

WINCHESTER, Mass., May 13.—Dana J. P. Wingate, Captain of the Harvard 'Varsity baseball team in 1913 and 1914, died last night at Saranac Lake, N. Y., where he had been for several months. Word of his death was received by his family here today. He was 30 years old.

SPANISH DANCERS BACK.

"The Land of Joy" Troupe at the Palace—"Maid of France."

The Spanish dancers who set most of New York to dancing Spanish when they appeared here earlier in the season in "The Land of Joy" are back in New York again, this time in vaudeville. In the interval between their departure and their reappearance they have carried the Spanish gospel to a considerable portion of the hinterland, and their reception at the Palace yesterday afternoon indicated that they are now a welcome addition to the roster of two-a-day entertainers. The program which they offer passes before five stage settings, and includes all varieties of dances, most of them made familiar through "The Land of Joy." The fiery Doloretes came in for much of the applause yesterday afternoon, but there was also plenty for Antonio Bilbao, who is the best of the male contingent; Maria Marco, Luisa Puchol, and Carmen Lopez. The company is numerous and includes a large chorus.

Also on the program is the Brighouse short piece, "Maid of France," already familiar here by reason of its performance at the Greenwich Village Theatre. Josephine Victor plays the somewhat trying rôle of Joan and declaims its speeches eloquently. For vaudeville purposes an American soldier has been slipped in just before the finale. Elizabeth Brice, whose erstwhile partner, Charles King, is now a naval recruit, is another on the bill.

"HELLO, AMERICA!" STARTS.

Summer Burlesque Show at Columbia Is Lacking Only in Comedians.

The Summer burlesque which unfolded itself before the patrons of the Columbia Theatre yesterday afternoon is a dressy and well-staged entertainment, called "Hello, America!" It is the annual custom at the Columbia, when a complete revolution of the burlesque wheel brings the season to an end, to select the most promising of the shows which have passed, deck it out in new costumes, add a new quota of girls, and offer the result for the Spring and Summer edification of burlesque lovers.

Accordingly there now comes "Hello, America!" which, barring a leaden book and a lack of real comedians, is a good burlesque show. That is to say, its girls are pretty and well dressed, the music is lively, the entertainment moves briskly, and there is a patriotic finale to the first act—which is all that burlesque demands. "Hello, America!" drags only when its comedians are on the stage, for not by even the most generous standard can the two featured performers of "Hello, America!" be regarded as funny.

But, since burlesque is frankly a cut-rate entertainment, perhaps too much cannot be expected. In all but comedians "Hello, America!" compares favorably with the average Broadway musical show, and viewed in this light it is a rare bargain. The audience at the matinée appeared to enjoy it hugely.

Women Eligible as Church Officers.

ATLANTA, Ga., May 13.—Women of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, today won their forty years' fight for full lay membership in the church when the General Conference, in session here, struck from the Church law the prohibition against their election as Church Stewards and as delegates to the General Conference. The measure passed today is practically the same as that defeated at the 1914 General Conference by a vote of 105 to 171.

The Dictaphone Reduces Overtime

THE orderly girl appreciates the opportunity that The Dictaphone gives her to plan her work. No jumping up to take dictation. Dictation comes to you. The office-boys bring the completed cylinders to your desk.

You know definitely how much work is ahead of you. You can figure better how to get it out. You have to write each letter only once—on the typewriter. Thus without strain and with less overtime work, you can double your daily output of letters.

Such greatly increased production improves your chances for better pay. We'll demonstrate The Dictaphone in your office, on your work without expense or obligation. Phone or write

THE OTTAWA MYSTERY.

Lord READING, the British Ambassador, was the most mystified of all men by the announcement, transmitted from Ottawa, that the War Committee of the British Cabinet, acting for the "Entente," had given out a statement that the American Army would not be used in the great battle now being waged, but would be held in reserve for a decisive stroke until it was "complete, powerful, self-supporting"; that is to say, had reached its full complement and was equipped and trained to the hour. "I am quite "in the dark as to the origin of the "statement," said the British Ambassador, who declared that it "is diametrically opposed to all information received by me from the British War "Cabinet and to all the requests "which I have been asked by them to "make to the United States Administration."

The reasons given for the relegation of the American Army to the rear until it was wanted were a strain on credulity. It was supposed that the French and British forces would soon have to deal with a resumption of the German offensive on a formidable scale, and that the crisis, therefore, had not passed, but was suspended. There was faith in General FOCH'S strategy, the troops were ready for the next shock, but the ordeal might be more terrible than ever. That was the feeling. Yet in the statement attributed to the British War Committee the failure of the German campaign seemed to be assumed. This language was used, inexplicable when the great losses of the British since March 21 are remembered:

> To the sledge-hammer use of masses of men by the enemy the Allies are opposing the strategy of meeting the blow with the smallest force capable of standing up to the shock, while keeping the strongest reserve possible. Troops on the wings are permitted to give ground within limits whenever the enemy has been made to pay a greater price than the ground is worth, the whole aim being to reduce the enemy to such a state of exhaustion that our reserve at the right moment can restore the situation.

The enemy's position was described as "tactically exposed in two dangerous salients on waterlogged ground." And there followed this optimistic summing up: "His reserves have "nearly reached complete exhaustion. "Those of the Franco-British are still "in being, while the American preparations develop. The time draws "closer when defeat is inevitable." So far as the American Army was concerned, the conclusion was that it had better be used as a unit later on to rout the enemy, overwhelm him, crush him at a selected time, and finish the war; that at present its cooperation in the field was not needed, which is altogether at variance with what has been generally understood. A more illogical and specious document could hardly have been conceived of. It flattered a natural sentiment for independent and decisive action by an American army under an American commander, but at the expense of common sense.

It was little more than a month ago that General PERSHING called on General FOCH and told him that "the "American people would hold it a "great honor for our troops were they "engaged in the present battle," and placed the American Army, with President WILSON'S approval, at the disposal of the French Generalissimo. The American soldiers were delighted at the prospect of getting into the fight. Later, considerable bodies of them were brigaded with French and British troops, and it may be said that there is no better method of bringing out the sterling qualities of the American soldiers and accustoming them to the stern ordeal of European warfare than the friendly rivalry of intimate touch with the seasoned French and British veterans. The latter are fighting elbow to elbow in the Ypres sector, and it is good, practical tactics to consolidate American troops with the Allies, at least until the American Army at the front grows into a formidable fighting force, strong in numbers and complete in equipment.

Secretary BAKER has promptly dealt with the Ottawa mystery by declaring that the American forces are to stay in the great battle now and regularly in the future. He affirms the wisdom of General PERSHING'S offer of the services of American soldiers unreservedly to General FOCH. "The facts are exactly otherwise," Mr. BAKER says of the remarkable announcement that the American Army is to be taken out of the fighting and held in leash, as it were, indefinitely, until it can be used as a great separate force to clinch victory. It remains to run down the origin of the weird Ottawa composition and fix the responsibility for its publication.

FEDERAL TAX REFORM.

The talk at Washington regarding the revision of the Federal tax law is about the effect upon the campaign and the condition of the Treasury's finances. It is said that the provisinn for the Government's expenses is so ample that there is no need of more funds, and even a chance of reducing taxes rather than raising them. More money was appropriated than could be spent, and that is a mistake which should not he repeated.

Such suggestions may be admitted, and yet there are other considerations which are weightier. The taxpayers should be considered as well as the Treasury. The taxes to be paid next year will be on the business of this year, and business should have the opportunity to conduct itself with regard to the tax laws. Much of the trouble under the present law arises from the fact that the legislation was without reference to the business which earned the taxes. There was not enough notice to enable the accounts to be kept so as to comply with the law, with justice to the Treasury and convenience to the taxpayers. The legislation was not in time to enable business to conform itself economically to the tax requirements. That is part of the explanation why large business operations are embarrassed for cash for taxes. Their resources are ample, hut they are in the business, not in money, except in the most forebanded cases. Concerns which must pay from a quarter to more than half of their profits in taxes should have foreknowledge of what the laws will be.

As the matter stands, Federal taxes must be paid either under the present admittedly imperfect laws or under laws passed now. The defects of the present laws are apart from the necessities of the Treasury, and they burden business hy more then the amount of the taxes. The method of taxation needs reform more than the Treasury needs money. The postponement of tax legislation would prevent the accommodation of this year's business to the new laws, and would compel Congressmen to confront their constituents with confession of error unrepented and unamended. The political hearing of new tax laws is relatively unimportent, but, so far as it is to be considered at all, it should promote immediate rather than deferred action. The wish to adjourn is natural, and is beneficial so far as it promotes tax legislation on tax considerations.

If the desire is merely and only to lay taxes so as to keep the Treasury and taxpayere both easy and comfortable, the task is much easier than to tax profits punitively, or to gather taxes sectionally, or to use taxes to remedy social inequalities or inequities. If Congress will keep its mind on taxes when it is making tax laws, there need be little trouble about speedy adjournment. Congress knows how to avoid errors so recently committed, and the prospect of bettering the laws is good in proportion that the effort is near to the fault. Postponement until after the Fall elections would be postponement until after a mandate had been given which could not be executed by the lawmakers thsn chosen. Nobody would wish tax revision to be postponed until the next Congress meets. The revision should be by the present Congress, and by it better before election than after it—better for Congress, better for the Treasury, better for taxpayers.

THE LIBERTY LOAN DISCOUNT.

The Liberty bonds issued at the highest interest rate have made the worst record regarding their market price. Before the total subscribed is known, the discount on the first day's trading, to a total of $3,538,000, is a minimum of 98.40. Yesterday they sold below 98, and the bonds convertible into them sold below 95. That is of no consequence if it is understood, but it is not likely that the 17,000,000 subscribers who are owners of national bonds for the first time perceive why they should be asked to pay more than the market would give the Government. Even though they may be indifferent to the amount of their apparent loss, and willing to take it for the sake of patriotism, for the same reason they do not like to think that they are shaved in the money market by those who did or do nothing for Government. They would not be if the bonds were issued on terms which made a distinction between those who provided funds for the Government and those who provide funds for the relief of those who overburdened themselves with Liberty bonds for a mixture of reasons, good and bad.

It is apparent that there is a difference in the relations of the Treasury with the original subscribers and with those who buy the honds at a discount. The original subscribers sold the Government ten-year money. Those who buy at a discnunt do nothing for the Government, hut provide themselves with a call loan, or practically cash carrying interest, at their own risk of profit or loss. There is no privity of contract between the buyers or sellers in the market and the Government, and the Treasury is under no obligations to use its sinking fund for their benefit. The Treasury is under special ohligation to those who provided funds below the market rate, and who find that they need their money back. Nobody can need it back before the bonds are issued and paid for, and, therefore, there is no reason why the sinking fund should be used now. Besides, it is clear that the sinking fund would not be equal to sustaining a market of several millions each day, and which it is desirable should he larger rather than smaller. A broad market at a suitable discount is better for the holders of the bonds than a narrow market at a somewhat higher price. It would be of great value to all if the market for Liberty honds were such that millions could hs sold without a quiver, or with a range within a small fraction.

This will come about in due season. The market will stabilize itself at its own par when its own action determines what that par is. The same result could be reached more easily and quickly if the Treasury could find some way to assure original subscribers that they could relieve their necessities more cheaply through the assistance of the Treasury than by application to the money market. The first step would he to draw the distinction between the par of the bonds and the par of the money market. Bonds issued at a fictitious par must find their market par. The market par is not patriotic. The subscriher's par is patriotic, and indifferent to the discount. The Treasury is not concerned with the market par, but is concerned to preserve the patriotic spirit which is indifferent to the discount, and would be more enthusiastic if that were not necessary. The Treasury cannot impose a fictitious par upon the money market, hut it might preserve par for the original subscribers, leaving the market price to take care of itself.

TOO MUCH TO BELIEVE.

It is probable that most people who read attentively the report of GEORGE CREEL'S address on Sunday night before the open forum of the Church of the Ascension read it with constantly growing surprise, and that the feeling left with them at the end was one of positive disquiet. Mr. CREEL, at the close of his address, answered questions from the audience concerning the policies of the Administration, and answered them as if he were the authorized spokesman of the Administration. Some of the questions were searching ones, like "Why "does America object to Japan entering Russia?" and "Why does not "the Government suppress the Hearst "newspapers?" Offhand and glibly, Mr. CREEL answered, and without the least reticence; nor was there anything in his words to indicate that he was not standing before that audience as the other self of the President. For instance, the question about why "the Government"—the Government, mind—does not suppress the Hearst newspepers was answered by Mr. CREEL as if he were "the Government":

> In the first place, I do not believe in the suppression of anything. * * *

So, when asked concerning Mr. ROOSEVELT'S activities, he replied in the same manner:

> I tell you quite frankly that I would regret deeply if anything were dons to rob us of Mr. ROOSEVELT'S criticism. * * *

"Us!" Asked concerning the suppression of the Lusitania memorial meeting in New York City in 1916, he used the same tone exactly:

> That was the work of your New York police, and I do not assume responsibility for them. * * *

When he was asked why America objected to Japan's entering Siberia, he made no reservations; he answered straightforwardly on behalf of the Government: "Because we feel," &c. He even gave a little advance news about the Government's taxation intentions: "The rich man is going to "be taxed higher and higher, until he "will have but little left."

Now, while Mr. CREEL was thus openly assuming the post of official spokesman of the Administration, he did not assume to be spokesman for the whole Government. He spoke with perfect assurance and confidence for the executive branch, but as soon as any other branch of the Government was mentioned he ceased to assume responsihility and ceased to appear as possessing perfect knowledge. This makes it impossible to conjecture that Mr. CREEL'S confident way of speaking is merely a mannerism. He speaks confidently for the Administration because he does count himself, or wishes others to count him, as the voice of the Administration; but when another branch of the Government is asked about, he does not pretend to any special knowledge. For examplo, asked a question about Congress, he replied:

> I don't like slumming, so I won't explore the heart of Congress for you.

It cannot be possible that Mr. CREEL is really the President's spokesman, or that, if he is, he is authorized to go about the country baring the President's mind extemporaneously on public platforms in reply to casual questions. It must he that Mr. CREEL has mistaken his position, his mission, his powers. It must be that he has too high an opinion of himself, that he has taken too seriously some kindly intended compliments which the President may have given him in conversation. It simply cannot be that the President has authorized the Chairman of the Committee on Public Information to discharge the President's mind at the top of his voice whenever some unknown person rises in a public meeting and asks him a question about important national policies.

ANOTHER HAT IN THE RING.

The forces of evil are at work overtime as usual. Of course Attorney General LEWIS denies that the liquor dealers have collected a fund for the benefit of his candidacy, but can he deny that Governor WHITMAN, whose methods and "many of whose policies" he dares to oppose, is one of our leading, if not one of our earliest, Drys, non-official, semi-official, or pretty official? Mr. LEWIS may he naught to the sellers of strong drink, but can he doubt that from behind their barrels they will all fight our dauntless Governor?

Then, what regrettable names of ancient bosses, what rank reactionaries, what old believers in the old Constitution, are reckoned among the Lewisites! WILLIAM BARNES, ELON R. BROWN, JACOB A. LIVINGSTON, HARVEY D. HINMAN, TANNER and SWEET and WARD—such are the scorners of the primary, Heaven's last best gift to man, the primary that gave us and can be trusted to give us again Governor WHITMAN, its Favorite Child.

If Mr. WILLIAM M. BENNETT, the Deserted Child of the primaries, is severe against the Governor, it is because Mr. BENNETT feels, most unjustly, that the Governor sometimes cares less for that sacred machine than for what particular candidate it turns out.

What with woman suffrage and this rival candidacy, the Republican primary campaign will be brisker than was hoped. The Governor is no bungling politician. He can see a vote as far as anybody. He has a Republican State Committee made to his order. He dotes on the farmers, whether they return his love or not. There are few more practical reformers. Can the primaries be untrue to one who loves them so well and works them so deftly?

To be sure, there is that "hoom," that beauteous vision of 1920. That vexes some bilious bosoms. Sufficient unto the year is the good thereof. Really, if the Governor could unboom that bonm, divest himself of that flimy hope, shake off that last infirmity!

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

New York Is Not Indifferent.

One of the American soldiers who marched through the London streets on Saturday is quoted as saying to somebody who had helped to make the day notable, even in a city that has seen millions of other troops starting off for the war: "Your people's hearts seem to he as big as the streets are broad. We had to leave New York without a cheer, and this makes up for it."

That statement, though all right in itself, may have given a wrong impression to the readers of the London paper that printed it—may have seemed to imply that we do not care very much about our soldiers over here and are not much interested in their movements.

Of course this soldier and all the others in the American uniform know better than that, and they also know that the reason why they "leave New York without a cheer" is because they march to the ships in the dead of night, and that the exact date of their embarkation and siart for "over there" is carefully concealed, even from their relatives and closest friends. What New York would do if it had a chence in the way of bidding our men good-bye as they steam toward the east and the greatest of Great Adventures is shown plainly enough by the welcome it accorded to the little company of Americans sent back here from the firing line in France to take part in the Liberty Loan campaign.

There was no lack of "heart" in that recsption, and thers would be cheers a-plenty for every departing regiment if it were not so highly expedient that the Germans on land and under the sea should be kept, as much as possible, uninformed as to all details in regard to these sailings. In London the situation is quite different. The journey thence to France, thanks to the British Navy, is practically safe from any dangers more terrible than the ordinary woes of a Channel passage.

And perhaps it is just as well that our men go away silently and at night. Parting may be a sweet sorrow, sometimes, but we know too well what awaits our soldiers on the other side not to feel the seriousness of these departures.

Will Women Attend the Primaries?

Just how much of a determination there is among the women of the State thoroughly to prepare themselves for the exercise of their new privilege as voters is a question to be decided on May 25, when they must enroll if they want to take any part in the selection of candidates for office. The women who rose to leadership in the campaign by which the enfranchisement of themselves and their sisters was attained show a full appreciation of the duty with which they, in common with all other voters, are confronted, but they are trained, not to say hardened, politicians, with more than the ordinary sense of civic responsibility. One cannot help suspecting—and, at least in theory, fearing—that the majority of women will take in qualifying for the primaries, and in attending the primaries, just about the same interest that the majority of men take.

And that is disgracefully, even shamefully, little. It is lamentably easy to find gray-haired men who, though they have clean records as having voted on every Election Day since they were 21, yet never attended a primary, and have been content—or, as has often happened, discontent—to make Hobson's choice between candidates in whose nomination they had no voice. That was their own fault, but it has not prevented them from complaining of the coercion exercised by the men who made a real business of politics.

It may be that the women will be more sensible and more virtuous in this as in several other matters. If so, they will set an excellent example and possibly bring the now negligent majority of masculine voters to a realization of their neglected duties. Incidentally, a good many of those same men might well feel something of embarrassment when they remember how little of conscious preparation they themselves ever made for voting intelligently, and see that a really considerable number of women think it needful to do a lot of careful studying before they go to the polls. The contrast is not as great as it seems, but it exists.

Of Course They Stole That Stove.

A first inclination, on reading such a story as the one printed yesterday about the stealing of a red hot stove by American soldiers in France, is to recall ancient jests, on and off the stage, that had the same achievement for basis, and thence to conclude that the correspondent who sent the tale over to us wrote it from memory and not from observation. That conclusion, however, would he a rash one. The circumstances were such as to make the informal commandeering of the stove and its burning contents desirable and feasible.

The soldiers were traveling in cold weather and had shivered long in an unheated and too well ventilated box car. Their numbers made easy the performance of a feat which, after all, and in spite of its traditional difficulty or assumed impossibility, is not really very hard. So, as the soldiers could have taken that stove if they had wanted to do it, and as they probably did, the chances are that the correspondent was veracious.

The solemnity of expression which has struck so many foreign observers of the American soldier seems incompatible with the stealing of red hot stoves, but it isn't at all likely that our boys are long-faced all the time or even much of it. If they are, they have suffered a strange sea change from what they were at home. What passes for solemnity may be merely the result of having had less experience than a good many other soldiers in marching through great crowds of intently watching people on whom it was necessary to make a good impression. Naturally, they would mind their steps with thoughtful care, and not trust the subconscious to direct them, as veterans would in like parades.

Besides, all good stories should be accepted as true—that on general principles. Literature, and history, too, would go to smash if it were not done.

AVIATION CASUALTIES.

The Men or the Machine at Fault in the Training Camps?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of this date you have an article entitled "Too Many Fliers Killed," in which you speculate on the cause of the large number of deaths among aviators at the training camps. The frequency of these deaths, your article says, "gives excuse for something between a suspicion and a belief that the care taken in selecting pupils for these schools is not what it might be." * * *

You may be right, but other persons who have remarked the large number of fatal accidents have been wondering if it is possible that there can be something the matter with some of the machines themselves. Accidents of the sort that happen to the young Americans who are beginning their training are also happening to the experienced men who are doing the teaching—members of the Royal Flying Corps, &c. These experienced men have stood the test of practical work, some of them for many months, under war conditions.

From this is seems possible that the disproportionately large number of deaths is due to something other than the personnel; possibly to some mechanical factor not absolutely under the control of the beginning fliers and their teachers. The obvious thing is to suggest that German agents, every now and then, succeed in tampering with the mechanism of some machine, either in the factory or after it has left the factory. Instances of German activity of a similar nature will immediately come to the minds of many readers. While the Senate is investigating the airplane situation it might not be amiss if this matter, too, were looked into. I trust that THE TIMES, which has called attention to the large number of deaths, will keep on calling attention to it until the real cause, whatever it may he, is discovered and abolished.

Services of the Handicapped.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your letter in today's columns from Dr. Lyman Abbott, commending the Henry Street crippled children for their interest in the Third Liberty Loan, calls my attention to an almost parallel case in the Bronx. At the Montefiore Home there is a class for crippled and invalid children. These unfortunate children, many of whom are from extremely poor families, are taught the usual elementary subjects and, in addition, are given instruction in basketry and other practical subjects that tend to take their minds off of the ailments from which they are suffering. I have been informed that from this class, from other patients in the home, and from the doctors and nurses more than $6,000 in subscriptions for the Third Liberty Loan was obtained, which was the "high water mark" for public school subscriptions in this district.

Here again is exemplified Dr. Abbott's conclusions based on the Henry Street results. For these "shut-ins" have also given practical proof that they believe in making the world safe for a democracy in which, alas, they themselves may have a very small physical part.

How many of us that are well and strong can read of these two examples and then wonder if we have done quite enough for "the cause"?

THE ROLL OF HONOR.

The photographs across the page in rows—
Home-taken things, with smile and little quirk
Of personality made clear—are those
Of eager youth—athlete and laborer, clerk,
Lads at the threshold, still half-wondering, keen,
Heirs of great happenings, laughing in the sun,
Whose racing blood and bodies, stesigirt, lean,
Have known fatigue and toil, the game well won.
So sure they are of what shall come, so strong,
They take for granted, years—the pageant way
They have passed down, idling as Kings along,
Wearing youth's splendid raiment every day.
All life is theirs, flaming in gold and red,
Yet printed words say strangely, "These are dead"!

THE GERMANS IN FINLAND.

An Answer to the Bolshevist Presentation of the Complicated Situation There.

By HERMAN MONTAGU DONNER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There appeared in your issue of the 11th inst., an account of a meeting held in Carnegie Hall the previous evening for the avowed purpose of expressing sympathy with the overthrown revolutionary Red Government of Finland, euphoniously styled the "Provisional Revolutionary Government of the People's Republic of Finland," and of welcoming to these shores, on behalf of the American Socialist Party, the first accredited representative of the first National Socialist Government in the world's history.

It is a matter of congratulation that your reporter did not fall into the error of styling the gathering a "Finnish mass meeting," as it had been announced, for the most casual observer who had ever come into personal contact with the natives of Finland needed only a cursory glance around the vast hall, crowded from floor to dome, to perceive that the Finns were conspicuous by their almost complete absence, that nation being represented almost solely by the women ushers on the floor and the Finnish mixed choir and musical trio.

The address of M. Santeri Nuorteva was of far more importance than that of Mr. Hilliquit, for the reason that the speaker was better acquainted with his facts. And herein lies my chief justification for this letter of protest on behalf of the many thousands of outraged Finlanders in the United States and elsewhere who object to seeing Mr. Nuorteva arrogate to himself with seeming impunity the right to speak for the Finnish people, and publicly pervert the facts of recent history in the late Grand Duchy whenever it suits his purposes so to do.

In his rôle as special pleader for the Iamblike Red Guard, whom a maleficent world has persisted in painting in gory hues, Nuorteva perpetrated his first bland speciosity when, at the outset of his speech, he referred to the Finnish revolutionists—I quote from my notes taken at the meeting—as "those struggling for the same thing for which we have been fighting," the "we" supposedly standing in this instance for the people of the United States in their hatred for freedom. This entirely false picture of the Red Guard as the only genuine democratic party in Finland, struggling to maintain the rights of the downtrodden proletarians against a ruthless aristocracy in league with German militarism, is so grotesque that one would dismiss it with a scornful laugh did not such monumental chicanery aim at concealing a national tragedy fully as ghastly and in many of its features as bestial as that of either Belgium or Serbia.

I have not space in a letter such as this to go into the question at as great length as the subject deserves, but must refer those of your readers who are interested in the full truth to my article on "The Tragedy of Finland" in the forthcoming number of The Outlook. Suffice it here to say that the pretense set up by Messrs. Hilliquit and Nuorteva in Carnegie Hall, in common with that of their Bolshevist apologists and adherents, that the Red Guard were the upholders and champions in Finland of ordered liberty and democracy, against the oppression of a feudal aristocracy in league with capitalism and German militarism, is an absolute, deliberate, conscious falsehood, put out with the express purpose of misleading American public opinion, and concealing the facts of the many months of awful, sickening atrocities committed by the armed Red Guard—armed hy the Russian Bolshevist Government after that Government had previously formally recognized the independence of the new Finnish Republic—with the active assistance of the undisciplined hordes of Muscovite soldiery let loose throughout the length and breath of the unhappy land, upon an unarmed and helpless populace, merchant and petty storekeeper, landowner and simple peasant, householder and domestic servant, indiscriminately.

To those who show a not unnatural reluctance to believe that human nature can sink to such unredeemed sloughs of hestiality in this supposed age of advanced civilization, we who are only too familiar with the heartrending facts need but point silently to hundreds of verified individual instances.

Santeri Nuorteva is a fluent and effective speaker, but his eloquence is far more notable than his strict addiction to the truth. Among his misstatements at the Carnegie Hall meeting were the assertions that in the old Four Estate Diet no manual worker had the right to vote for the Order of the Burgesses; that in 1905 the decision of the Finnish Landtdag in favor of a reform to the One-Chamber system was brought about by the Red Guard surrounding the Diet House and refusing to allow any representative to leave until he had voted for that reform; that the class struggle in Finland was so keen that the working classes were never allowed to hold their own meetings by the ruling bourgeois caste; that the White Guard forces are officered hy Germans and are the servants of Berlin military schemers; and the fable that a Finnish Socialist had to feign allegiance to the ruling class till at the end of two years he was able to buy a plot of land, and could then, and not till then, turn around and hand the land over to the Socialist party to serve them for building purposes!

Of far different complexion are the facts with regard to Finland. Even under this somewhat antiquated system of the Four Estates, Finland was perhaps the most essentially democratic State in the world, with no marked extremes of wealth or poverty, and with public servants of a combined capacity and integrity whose equal was hard to find in any other Government, large or small. In 1897, before the Socialist party had even come into being in Finland, Senator Leo Mechelin, in the old House of Nobles, urged woman suffrage; and in 1905 the equal franchise hill was passed by unanimous consent of all parties. The very plot of ground on which the present Socialist headquarters at Brohoim stands was given by the municipality of Helsingfors to the Helsingfors Trades Unions, wholly without reference to party affiliations or political or social propaganda.

In conclusion, it is pertinent to the issues at stake that not once in the course of the evening's proceedings at the Carnegie Hall meeting did one of the Socialist special pleaders so much as allude to the report of American Consul Haynes at Helsingfors, cabled to Washington on May 1, in which the official American representative in Finland speaks categorically of the "overthrow of legal authority and the rampant anarchy by the Red Guardists," and stigmatizes it as the one cause of the forced appeal of the White Guard or Constitutional Government for assistance from Germany in the way of arms, after Sweden had weakly declined.

Those who are interested in the full facts of the complex situation thus created, I may again state, will find them set forth in my article, already mentioned as about to appear in this week's Outlook, and written long before Consul Haynes's report was forwarded. They can then come to their own conclusions as to how far either Nuorteva or Hilliquit can be trusted as exponents of either Finnish history, whether past or present, or Finnish institutions and ideals.

The Salvation Army on the Battlefield.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

She has no press agent, this Salvation Army lassie, and when the doughboys move up to the front line trench "over there," begrimed with dust and mud, they gaze in wonder at the poke-bonneted Martha awaiting them with her basket of doughnuts and bucket of coffee. "Sister Madsline," they call her, and they will tell you that this Martha of the battlefield has a heart that pulses 100 per cent. true to the call of service, let bullet and shell speed where they will—and more than one Sister Madsline has staggered through with crimsoned basket.

You of over here listen to one of Pershing's khaki stalwarts?

"I have just turned my pockets inside out, and the tambourine could hold much more, but it was all 1-had, and I am still in the debt of the Salvation Army. For what? you ask. For about all that I brought back of body and soul! For hot coffee and cookies when I was shivering like an aspen; for buttons and patches on my tattered uniform; for steering me clear of the camp followers, the parasites that decimate the morale of the army; but more than all," and the veteran of some lively scraps with the Hun turned his softening glance toward France and the American sector, "more than all, for the cheery word, for the solace of those 'gone west,' for the blessed face of a woman from the home-land in the midst of withering blight and desolation."

And so, Sister Madsline carries on! Unpressagented, her work almost unknown to those over here, but enshrined in the heart of each brave defender of the right "over there." And when he returns to his mansion or cottage, this crusader who fought to "keep the home fires burning," a paean of praise will be sung for Sister Madsline, the Martha of the battlefield.

Art and War Economy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It seems there is a misconception of what war economy is. If one buys unneeded shoes or clothes, or builds an extension to his house that is not really necessary, it is a lack of war economy, since it uses labor needed for vital and war products. But if one buys a painting, rare old art objects, and such things, it uses up no labor useful to the war, but merely transfers money from one person's bank account to another's. The sale of the artist Degas's work the other day in Paris brought over 5,000,000 francs. In what way was that money wasted by being in the hands of his family instead of in the hands of the purchasers? The first mentioned uses of money do interfere with war work—the sale of paintings in no way does. Depend upon it, that if it did, it would never have occurred in France today.

Notice of Safe Arrival.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The system adopted by the Government to allay the reasonable nervousness of friends and relatives of soldiers going overseas is that postals written by these soldiers here are mailed to the relatives when the Government has cable advice of the ship's safe arrival. Not long since, a very near relative sailed, and the very next day we received the postal. Is it possible that the Government is careless in the mailing of these postals? The trouble in this case is that, having received the postal, undoubtedly improperly, how will we know when the boy arrives?

DRAFT ACTS COMPLETED.

Compromise Reached on Exemption of Certain Students.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Final steps toward completion of legislation amending the selective service law were taken today by Congress. A complete agreement was reached by Senate and House conferees on the bill extending the law to youths attaining their majority since last June. The dispute over exemption of theological and medical students from registration was compromised with the adoption of a provision exempting them if actually enrolled when the act is signed, but requiring registration of those who enter schools afterward. The provision placing new registrants at the bottom of eligible lists was retained.

The conference report was adopted after considerable debate, in which a number of Senators denounced elimination from another hill already passed of the plan to give States credit for volunteers. Senator Johnson of California said elimination of the provision penalized enthusiastic States. Senator Phelan of California said he would circulate a petition asking President Wilson not to approve the measure. Senator Pomerene of Ohio said he would prepare a substitute plan.

The bill changing the basis of draft quotas from State populations to the number of men in Class 1 was signed late today by Vice President Marshall and Speaker Clark and sent to President Wilson for his approval. This measure has been before Congress for several months. It will be put into effect as soon as signed by the President, as plans were ready for making the May draft, already ordered, on the new basis.

ASK FOR A HIGH SCHOOL.

Washington Heights Interests Petition School Board for Building.

Representatives from a large number of civic organisations on Washington Heights pleaded before the Board of Education yesterday for a high school in that neighborhood. Meyer G. Goldman, President of the School Parents' Betterment League, said that they had a population of from 250,000 to 300,000 and that it was constantly increasing. All that they had been able to get thus far was an annex to the Morris High School. Conditions up there were intolerable. Travel by high school children, of whom there were 3,500, was made under conditions that were scandalous.

Alderman J. W. Friedmen said that a high school there was absolutely needed. Rabbi Manuel Herlz declared that the population of Washington Heights had doubled within the last ten years. The Rev. Dr. Milo H. Gates said that the poulation was of the middle class that sent its children to the public schools. Secretary Bolton of the Washington Heights Taxpapers' Association, said that there were 40,000 families in that part of the city.

President Somers promised that he and his associates would give the matter carafui consideration and try to meet the demands of Washington Heights.

HOUSE VOTES TODAY ON OVERMAN BILL

Only Perfunctory Opposition Developes in Debate, and Its Passage Is Expected.

FEW CHANGES INDICATED

Some Members Insist Commerce and Reserve Boards Should Be Exempted from Control.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The House today began consideration of the Overmen Co-ordination bill, with the intention of voting upon it tomorrow. Little interest was manifested, Republicans making only perfunctory opposition. They will urge that it be amended to exempt the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Fsedral Reserve Board from its provisions, but indications are that the bill will be passed in virtually the form in which it came from the Senate.

Representatives Longworth and Fess of Ohio and Walsh of Massachusetts made speeches demanding the exclusion of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Reserve Board from the agencies of the Government which can be controlled hy the President under the hill.

Representative Webb of North Carolina, as Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, sponsored the bill and explained its provisions. He said he would object to a provision requiring the President to report to Congress on every change made.

"There is no unusual power granted in this bill," he said. "I cannot understand how gentlemen will complain of the power we grant here when they have already within the last twelve months voted to give the President a thousand times greater and more important power to exercise at his discretion. It will not do for men who voted to conscript two or three million of the boys of the country, to be turned over to the direction of one man, to say now, 'While I voted to trust all of these boys in his care, I am not willing to trust him with the co-ordination of a few of the executive functions of the Government of the United States.'

"In the Food Control bill we gave the President far greater power than it is proposed to give him in this bill. Congress, in the Food bill, turned over to one man the power practically to starve the United States if he were a bad man and wanted to do it; to stop absolutely all exportation of manufactured or raw material produced in this country. You put it in his discretion to say what articles shall or shall not be exported or received. Let us not strain at gnats and swallow camels."

Mr. Webb said there was much duplication in the Government. "I think the whole Government," he declared, "ought to be gone over with a fine tooth comb by some splendid efficiency hoard, and a comprehensive recommendation made to this Congress, so that duplication may be avoided. Why have six or eight auditors in the various departments, each doing the same work that other departments are doing?"

With this legislation enacted by the House, Congress will have disposed of all of the special war bills and can devote itself entirely to annual appropriation bills. The two important annual supply measures unacted upon are the Military hill and the Fortification bill, both of which will be reported from committee in the next few days.

Representative Claude Kitchin, Democratic leader of the House, said tonight that the House would be ready to adjourn by July 1 if not called upon to pass another revenue bill. Conferences he had had with members of the Appropriation Committee, he said, had convinced him that there was no need for another revenue bill before next year, as the estimates could be scaled by from three to four billions without injuring war production.

There is a great feeling of unrest among members of the House who are anxious about their political fortunes in this election year, Mr. Kitchin said, and he is doubtful whether a quorum can be maintained to pass a revenue bill. The political factor is influencing the Democratic leaders greatly, and this aspect will be placed before Secretary McAdoo by Senator Simmons and Representative Kitchin when they confer with him tomorrow about the financial situation.

CUT TRAVEL TO COAST.

Curtailment of Trains Expected to Save $18,000,000 a Year.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Director General McAdoo today ordered curtailment of transcontinental passenger schedules from Chicago west, effective June 2, to save 11,728,000 train miles a year, by eliminating competition and cutting down running schedules. The curtailment, with reductions previously made, is expected to result in a saving of about $18,000,000 a year.

Under the new arrangement the Santa Fé will be the principal road carrying passenger traffic from Chicago to Los Angeles, the Chicago & Northwestern, Union Pacific, and Southern Pacific to San Francisco, the Burlington & Northern Pacific to Portland, Ore., and the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul to Seattle.

Fast trains will make the trip to all four Pacific Coast terminals in seventy-two hours and secondary trains in seventy-eight hours. Extra fares now charged on a few fast trains will be eliminated. Mail schedules will be rearranged so as not to discriminate against any city. The reductions are to be effected mainly by taking off local trains and adding their traffic to through trains.

The public will be adequately served, said a Railroad Administration announcement, but probably more upper berths will be sold.

A similar curtailment is now being worked out for southwestern territory. About 35,000,000 train miles already have been saved in the Eastern district.

NEW ARMY HONORS BILL.

Baker Submits a Substitute for Measures Now Pending.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The War Department's plan for awarding honor decorations to soldiers distinguishing themselves in the service was submitted today in an Administration bill, forwarded by Secretary Baker as a substitute for measures pending in Congress.

The decorations proposed are a Medal of Honor, a Distinguished Service Cross, and a Distinguished Service Medal. All decorations under the bill might be awarded by an army commander in the field. As no second decorations could be awarded, the bill proposes additional bars or other insignia, to be worn attached to the emblem previously won. A pay increase of $2 monthly to enlisted men for each decoration and additional bar added is proposed by the terms of the bill.

FIRST $100,000 GIFT IN RED CROSS DRIVE

Charles Hayden's Contribution Announced at Dinner of Team Captains.

CAMPAIGN STARTS MONDAY

Eliot Wadsworth Describes How Workers Succored Soldiers in German Offensive.

Eliot Wadsworth, the Acting Chairman of the National Red Cross, who spoke last night at a meeting in the Waldorf-Astoria of the Captains and members of the thirty-one Red Cross teams who will direct the raising of New York's share of the minimum of $100,000,000 in the Red Cross drive, beginning next Monday, told the great share of the Red Cross in the relief of refugee civilians and in looking after French and British soldiers during the first phase of the German offensive.

After describing the earlier part of a trip to Compiègne, which he had made with other Red Cross officials at the beginning of the German drive, he continued:

"We saw the remnant of the British Army coming out, lost Tommies, wounded men, men with shell-shock being led along, squads of cavalry, a few scraps of an artillery battery, everything pouring down the great road from Noyon to Compiegne, and at the same time the French were going in. This was on Monday. We went on, we couldn't find anything there, we went on to Lassigny, again we found the British Army coming out in squads, great caterpillar engines dragging a big gun, a few motor cyclists, and all the riffraff that would come from a great battle of that sort. We could not find our unit there, but we found it at Montdidier. They had gotten out of Ham just before the Huns came in. Jackson, who was in charge of it, was the last man over the bridge with the camion, just before they dynamited it, and he had been carrying British wounded all that day in this big camion, one of the Red Cross camions. It was a Smith College unit, and the women that came out had at once gone to the station and had set up a canteen and were taking care of the refugees with the supplies they had brought out with them.

Wished for Million Americans.

"So we found that they were all out as we went back, and we reached Compiegne, crowded with people going out, and our only thought as we looked at this mob and saw the French coming in to save the day was: 'If we only could go up there with a million bayonets from America and take our part in this situation and stop this drive.'

"But we could not, so we did the next best thing. The next morning, the first thing, we sent to Compiegne a great field kitchen, a squad of men. There were a number of women there who were nursing in one of the hospitals which had been evacuated, and we added some others; and for five days those women stood there at the bridge at Compiegne and gave out encouragement and food to the French soldiers that were going in. It was probably the most wonderful piece of organization that had ever been carried out.

"The French went through there for nearly five days in a steady stream, camions almost exactly ten yards apart, day and night, loaded with men or loaded with equipment, or dragging 75s, or dragging ammunition. It always brings back to me the pictures of the herds of buffalo that we used to see in our children's books. It never stopped; they were always going. If one broke down, there was a towrope right there to pick it up; and, starting from Compiegne, some of them had been on the road two or three days; and they picked up the line mile by mile from Noyon to Lassigny, from Lassigny to Montdidier, and so on; and those American men and women of the Red Cross stood there and handed them out a cup of coffee, or some soup, or a great, big piece of chocolate, or a big piece of cheese with some crackers, and always the encouraging words, 'From America, and good luck.' That was the part that the Red Cross played—all it could play in that crisis."

First Gift of $100,000.

William C. Breed, Chairman of the New York City organization in charge of the Red Cross drive, announced the first large individual subscription, one for $100,000, from Charles Hayden. It was accompanied by the following letter:

New York, May 8, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Breed:

It gives me much pleasure, now that the Red Cross drive is on again, to renew my subscription of last year for $100,000. While, due to reduced incomes, high cost of living, and heavy taxes, many of us have times when we feel that we are justified in cutting down on our charitable contributions, still, in the case of the Red Cross, I cannot but feel that the urgency and desirability of this fund being raised at the present time is so much greater, due to our boys now being in France, that it much more than offsets any sacrifice it may require in giving the same amount that was given in the previous campaign. This is especially true as we are looking to a very large number of new and small subscribers, due to the increased membership of the Red Cross.

I think it would have a very bad effect in inspiring those people to subscribe if they were to find that the larger subscribers of the preceding campaign were going to reduce their subscriptions. Therefore, it gives me the greatest pleasure to hand you my subscription to this second drive, and hoping that you will push the same so far "over the top" of $100,000,000 that it will almost be lost sight of, I am, Very sincerely,

CHARLES HAYDEN.

Plans for the house-to-house canvass, for intensive methods of collection in the business and financial district and for innumerable meetings, benefits, and rallies were discussed at the dinner.

Fly the Red Cross Flag.

Mayor Hylan in a proclamation yesterday called on all citizens of New York to fly their flags during Red Cross Week and to give with the greatest generosity. His proclamation was as follows:

City of New York,
Office of the Mayor.

PROCLAMATION.

The President of the United States has by proclamation designated the week beginning May 20, 1918, as "Red Cross Week," during which the people of the United States will be called upon to give generously to the continuation of the important work of relieving distress, restoring the waste of war, and assisting in maintaining the morale of our own troops and the troops and peoples of our allies.

The war fund of 1917, so generously contributed by the American people to the American Red Cross for the administration of relief at home and abroad, has been practically exhausted by appropriations for the welfare of the men in our military and naval forces, for those dependent upon them, and for the yet more urgent necessities of our allies.

With the full co-operation of all our citizens, New York will continue to set an example to the American people in generous contribution to the American Red Cross, which is the recognized public instrumentality for war relief.

Let our contributions be a magnificent manifestation of effort and sacrifice on our part, who, though not privileged to bear arms, are of one spirit, purpose, and determination with our warriors.

I hereby direct that during the week of May 20 to 27 the flag of the American Red Cross shall be displayed upon public buildings in the city, and I call upon all inhabitants of the city appropriately to decorate their buildings and to display therefrom, beside the flag of the United States, the colors of the Red Cross.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused my seal to be affixed.

Done in the City of New York, this thirteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen.

JOHN F. HYLAN, Mayor.

Something of the vast work in Europe which has been accomplished by the Red Cross, and will continue under its direction, was told in a letter from Sergeant Major Kingsley Moses of the American Air Service in Italy. Sergeant Moses, whose home is in this city, was in Italy at the time of the temporary collapse of the Italian front, and tells of the great work carried out by the Red Cross at that time in the following letter:

Lives Saved in Italy.

"The Red Cross is undoubtedly the most useful single activity of all the war charities. You can quote that from one of the first thousand American aviators overseas if you want—for I did have the lucky distinction of being one of that first thousand.

"The work of the Red Cross in Italy has been wonderful. No one knows what would have happened to the miserable thousands, even hundreds of thousands, after the horrible Gorizia disaster last Fall if it had not been for the succor of the Red Cross. For days after that catastrophe—the greatest of the whole war—the refugees came streaming through here, penniless, hungry, women and children half naked, battered, and wounded. Just then it was a problem as to what should become of them, but the Red Cross solved that problem almost as soon as it came up, and today there is no perceptible suffering or poverty in the whole kingdom.

"I can say this without doubt, as I have just returned from a week's leave to Rome and Naples. In both cities spending all of my time wandering around among the people and talking with them. As a result, I can say with perfect assurance that there is no sign among the people of any omen of trouble internally. Which is more, I imagine, than can be said of the people of Germany."

Clergymen and rabbis all over the city have been called upon to hold special Red Cross services immediately preceding the beginning of the drive. Next Sunday, the day before the drive begins, special services will be held in nearly every church in the city, and sermons preached with the object of bringing home to congregations the magnitude of the task undertaken by the Red Cross and the necessity for giving it the fullest possible backing. Red Cross workers have been requested to attend services in uniform.

Plans to aid vigorously in the Red Cross campaign were laid yesterday at a conference of rabbis and the editors of Jewish newspapers, which was held at the Educational Alliance, 197 East Broadway.

PRAISES AMERICANS FOR WAR RELIEF WORK

Ex-Head of French Sanitary Service Says Our Wounded Will Be Well Cared For.

Accompanied by several members of the French Army Medical Corps, Justin Godart, former French Assistant Secretary of War in charge of the Sanitary Service, left for Washington last night to take part in conferences with Surgeon General Gorgas of the army and other American medical authorities, in furtherance, M. Godart said yesterday, of the already active co-operation, unity of plan and technique that existed between the medical services of the two countries.

At the invitation of the American Red Cross he will tour the country during the Red Cross drive for funds, emphasizing, he said, the need of ever-increasing effort to meet the demands of an allied army constantly enlarging in magnitude.

"The French medical service," he said, "is rapidly approaching perfection. The practical experience the war has given to the medical and surgical sciences has made for unheard of strides in both branches. It is a fact that, at the present time, 94 per cent. of French wounded soldiers are returned to the front after the best possible treatment; that the remaining 6 per cent., the badly wounded, men disabled through the loss of limb or injury to vital organs, are enabled to continue of service to the country in civilian pursuits.

"The three years of war has given this experience, this ability to so cope with every situation as it arises, that the French Government is well satisfied with its medical branches. To the end that American surgeons and physicians now in France might gain the fullest knowledge from the French Medical Corps, every important conference in which medical matters are discussed has been attended by American Army surgeons now in France.

"You have wonderful physicians here in this country, and the treatment your soldiers will receive from their own medical officers at the front will be unsurpassed. The ambulance service, an institution so nobly aided by Americans by the contribution of countless hundreds of ambulances and the men to handle them, has been marvelously developed, thanks to American ingenuity and foresight."

M. Godart spoke in praise of the work done by independent war relief organizations, the Y. M. C. A., and Knights of Columbus. He made especial reference to the American Committee for Devastated France, of which Miss Anne Morgan is the founder and sponsor.

The American troops had made a notable impression on the French people, said M. Godart, who was a member of the French official party which attended the funeral services for the first three American soldiers killed on French soil. At the beginning of the war M. Godart was the Deputy from Lyons, a French industrial centre. With other Deputies he was enrolled for active service in the French Army, and despite his fifty odd years he saw service at the front with an ambulance unit until recalled to Paris in an official capacity.

BRINGS HONOR TO C. A. COFFIN.

M. Godart Confers Rank of Officer of Legion of Honor.

The French Government, through M. Justin Godart, who is in this country on a special mission, has conferred on Charles A. Coffin, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the General Electric Company, the rank of Officer of the Legion of Honor, in recognition of the services as a member of the Executive Committee of the War Relief Clearing House for France here in this city, and as a member of a committee of prominent Americans promoting the establishment of scholarships in French universities for American students after the war.

Mr. Coffin succeeded Judge Robert S. Lovett as the head of the Committee on Co-operation appointed by the Red Cross to negotiate with independent war relief organizations. In his capacity of member of the Executive Committee of the War Relief Clearing House he had a controlling interest in its affairs.

$118,054 COLLECTED BY SALVATION ARMY

City's Quota of $250,000, Officers Believe, Is Now in Sight.

PERSHING SENDS MESSAGE

Police Called Upon to Round Up Fake Collectors Who Have Reaped a Harvest Here.

It was announced late yesterday that $118,054 of New York's quota of $250,000 for Salvation Army war work had been collected, and the officers were confident the entire sum would be subscribed by Saturday night, the end of the drive. General Pershing sent another message of good-will and commendation to the organization yesterday through Adjt. Gen. John S. Johnston, U. S. A., at Washington. It follows:

General Pershing has requested me to transmit to you the following contents of his cablegram of May 7, as follows: "Salvation Army doing splendid work with the American Army in France, and much appreciated by our men."

The Salvation Army yesterday asked the assistance of the police to round up a small army of fake collectors who have appeared in the streets. Mrs. Johnston Preston of 538 West End Avenue notified the army headquarters that on Sunday she had motored to Pelham Bay and had encountered a score of unauthorized men and women, widely scattered along the road, all asking for money in the name of the Salvation Army and extending pie tins as the emblem of the Salvationists, who have made the American pie famous in France. A well-dressed woman on a subway train in Brooklyn was making a very profitable trip when she approached a real Salvationist and was promptly exposed. The officers report that bogus collectors with pie plates have made their appearance in certain residential districts.

"All Salvationists are either in uniform or equipped with credentials signed by the proper officials," said Colonel McIntyre.

The contractor who put up the giant scoreboard at Wall and Broad Streets neglected to build also a way to reach one side of the giant scales which the uplifted hand of Justice holds aloft and where the figures denoting the progress of the drive should appear. In consequence the army appealed to the Fire Department yesterday to have a ladder sent around so that the scales can be adjusted.

A committee of the Home Guards of New Jersey, consisting of Captain J. J. Scanlan and William Sulzer, both from West New York, N. J., turned in to headquarters thirty-nine pounds of coin which the Home Guards had gathered in small amounts at ball games and other gatherings yesterday. Joseph P. Taylor, connected with the Canadian Recruiting Station, had aroused the Home Guard, and its members have been busy in New Jersey ever since. Saturday they took fifty pounds of coin to headquarters.

SEEK AMBULANCE FUND.

Brooklyn Women's Motor Corps Also Wants More Members.

A campaign is being conducted by the Brooklyn Division of the Motor Corps of America, which is composed exclusively of women, to obtain new members, and efforts are being made at the same time to raise funds to buy a motor ambulance for home service. A play, entitled "Little Fairy Sisters," will be given for the purpose of obtaining funds for the ambulance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Monday evening, May 20.

The Brooklyn branch of the Motor Corps, which was organized several months ago by Mrs. Margaret Ogilvie, Miss Jessie Cantrell, and Mrs. Olivia Norris, now has 100 members with more than fifty motor cars and three motor ambulances. The motor Corps has aided in transporting sick and wounded soldiers, and has been at the service of officers of the army and the navy to carry them about on official business. Members of the organization give their services, and none are admitted to the corps unless they have a chauffeur's license and have served three months in a hospital.

MISS CREELMAN A BRIDE.

Daughter of Late James Creelman Weds Col. Harold W. Huntley.

Miss Constance Alice Creelman, daughter of the late James Creelman, the newspaper correspondent, and Lieut. Col. Harold Woods Huntley, Field Artillery, U. S. A., were married yesterday at St. Mark's Church by the Rev. Dr. William N. Guthrie.

The ceremony was witnessed only by the relatives in this city and a few intimate friends, and was followed by a luncheon at the residence of the bride's mother, 131 East Sixty-sixth Street. Owing to the exigencies of war, Colonel Huntley arrived from Camp Gordon, in Georgia, only a few hours before the wedding.

Little Miss Eileen Creelman, the young sister of the bride, carried her bouquet, and Brice A. Frey was best man. The bride's brother, James A. Creelman, is attached to the Aviation Corps of the army, and owing to his absence, Bradford Merrill, a relative of Mrs. Creelman's family, gave her in marriage.

Colonel Huntley's family is well known in Oneida County, N. Y. Since his graduation at the United States Military Academy at West Point, his promotion in the field artillery has been rapid.

MISS BUDD WEDS AVIATOR.

The Bride of Lieut. Henry S. Houghton, Instructor in Gunnery.

Miss Natalie Budd, daughter of Henry A. Budd of New York and Garden City, L. I., and Lieutenant Henry Seymour Houghton, pilot-aviator, stationed at Gerstner Field, Lake Charles, La., were married last evening at the rectory of the West Park, Presbyterian Church by the Rev. Anson P. Atterbury.

Lieutenant Houghton is a son of the late Dr. H. Seymour Houghton, formerly President of the Medical Society of the County of New York, and is an instructor in aerial gunnery at Gerstner Field. He was formerly attached to the mounted squad of the 7th Regiment, and served at the Mexican border. He received a special furlough for his marriage.

PUTS LOYALTY FIRST IN CONGRESS CONTESTS

League for National Unity Urges Root's Plan of Sinking Political Differences.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Representatives of the League for National Unity conferred with leaders in Congress today and appealed to them to use their influence to elect men to Congress next November who would stand for "war till victory." The cause was presented to Representative Scott Ferris, Chairman of the Democratic Congressional Committee; Representative Frank Woods, Chairman of the Republican Congressional Committee, and to Representative Claude Kitchin and Representative F. H. Gillett, leaders of the House.

In addition to the appeal, the text of which has already been published, the committee made public a letter from Elihu Root to Representative Woods, in which the ex-Senator said:

"I do not believe that there is a single Congressional district which has not a stanch, loyal majority, but I understand that there are probably from twenty to thirty districts in which there are enough pro-German and pacifist and extreme Socialist votes to make it possible for a disloyal candidate to be returned by a plurality if the loyal vote is divided pretty evenly between the Republican and Democratic Parties. Such men would do infinite harm to our country in Congress; their election would bring aid and comfort to the enemy; would dishearten all loyal citizens, and would be discreditable to both political parties. Of course, parties must continue; their organization must be maintained, and neither one ought to make the patriotism of the other a means of obtaining an advantage for the future; but, after all, the differences between parties are of trifling consequence as compared with the overwhelming issue of life or death for our free Republic which depends upon winning this war. If in any district there is the least chance that a disloyal man may be sent to Congress, then there is only one issue in that district; that is the issue of loyalty. Neither party, nor race, nor religion, nor service, nor popularity is of any consequence at all compared with the question whether the people of that Congressional district shall be represented in Congress by a man loyal to the core, who will use all his power and work with all his might to win the war for America.

"The practical and patriotic course seems plainly to be for your two committees to agree upon what districts would be in the least doubtful in a three-cornered fight, and in such districts, where the Republicans seem to have the best prospect for votes, urge the Democrats to get behind a loyal Republican candidate, and in districts where the Democrat seems to have the best prospect for votes, urge the Republicans to get behind a loyal Democratic candidate. If upon any districts you cannot agree as to that question, arbitrate it or get it decided in some way, so that loyal men may not be prevented by mere party differences from rendering loyal service to our dear country in this time of terrible trial and danger by the use of the ballot which is the privilege and instrument of their liberty."

The committee assured the representatives of the Democratic and Republican National Committees of the hearty co-operation of the league in the coming election only of candidates loyal to the Government.

PUPPET THEATRE OPENS.

Marionettes Exhibited in Fifth Avenue in Aid of Red Cross.

The Red Cross Puppet Theatre opened at 723 Fifth Avenue yesterday afternoon with promising prospects for its two weeks' run. The novelty of marionettes in the very heart of the social zone attracted many fashionable people, especially at last night's performance. Children by the score attended the two matinée shows.

At the close of the program a puppet in the garb of a Red Cross nurse held out its apron for contributions, which was quickly filled with contributions for the cause.

Today a "barker" is to be stationed outside the theatre, and bagpipes will help to attract the passing throngs. The windows have been decorated in cubist fashion, in one of which appears a miniature stage and puppet.

Paul Chalfin arranged the settings of the tiny theatre with wooden benches, walls, and ceilings decorated in Italian fashion. The puppets are shown by Tony Sarg.

The patronesses of the theatre are Mrs. James A. Burden, Mrs. Seymour Cromwell, Mrs. William A. Delano, Mrs. Reginald Fincke, Mrs. Sumner Gerard, Mrs. Meredith Hare, Mrs. Paul Manship, Mrs. Walter Maynard, Mrs. Rogers Winthrop, and Mrs. Victor Morawetz.

COMPLETE WAR HOSPITAL.

New Government Plant at Fox Hills Can Care for 3,000 Patients.

The new United States Base Hospital at Fox Hills, Staten Island, three miles and a half from St. George, was practically finished yesterday, with accommodations for 3,000 sick and wounded men and provision for an increased number of beds.

The plant at present consists of seventy-five buildings, streets and sewers, and a railroad connecting with St. George. The buildings are laid out to allow for indefinite expansion. Provision could be made in a short time for 6,000 patients. It will be policed for the present by 250 infantrymen from Camp Fox, Georgia. Patients arriving in hospital ships will be removed to cars and taken directly to the hospital building in which they are to stay.

The plant as it now exists was built in three months, under the direction of Colonel C. A. Simonds. A record for speed is claimed for some parts of the work, and on Thursday an effort will be made to establish a record for speed in the construction of a building 180 feet long and 30 feet wide. Under the schedule, 200 workmen are expected in five hours to dig the holes, lay the pile foundations, run up the building, put in the steam-heating apparatus, connect the sewers, and equip the building in other respects.

Two War Benefits.

NEW SEAPLANE TESTED IN FLIGHT AT FLUSHING

Navy Officers Try Availability of Craft Intended for Coast Defense Work Abroad.

Under the direction of the Naval Aviation Board a trial was made yesterday afternoon at College Point of one of the new seaplanes that has been designed particularly for coast defense work abroad. The inspection was at the plant of the L. W. F. Engineering Company, where certain work in connection with the new craft is under way. Lieutenant Wesson of the United States Navy was in charge of the inspection and he made a trip in the seaplane, which was driven by Ensign Slater, one of the most skilled of the navy aviators. There was a flight over Flushing Bay, and the availability of the new craft was shown in the fact that it was driven in and out among the many pleasure craft and yachts that were anchored in the bay. It was an experience very similar to the driving of an automobile through some of the crowded lanes of travel in this city. On Sunday a trial trip with the seaplane had been made by aviators in the employ of the company, and it was then pronounced fit and up to the expectations of the designers.

Absolutely no details of the seaplane, beyond the fact that it was driven by one of the new Liberty motors, was given out nor would any information be given as to the plans that the Navy Department had made for its use.

CLOTH SPONGERS ON STRIKE

Defection of Workers Will Delay Army Uniforms, Employers Assert.

More than 350 cloth spongers and examiners employed in thirty-three factories in this city which are turning out cloth for the Government went on strike yesterday and refused to return to work while their demands were submitted to arbitration, although they knew that uniforms would be delayed for the army, according to a statement made last night by Edward Fillmore, President of the Textile Finishers' Association.

Mr. Fillmore said that the strikers, who belong to the Cloth Examiners' and Spongers' Union, had demanded an increase of $4 a week in wages. The examiners were now receiving $29 a week and the spongers $24, Mr. Fillmore said, while the Government was obtaining men for the same work at $22 and $18 a week respectively. Mr. Fillmore said that the association of employers, who were in conference yesterday with the leaders of the strike at the Hotel McAlpin, offered an increase of $2 a week, pending arbitration by the Federal authorities at Washington. The employers, Mr. Fillmore said, also were willing to deposit $6 a week for each man in a bank which they would give the workers if the Arbitration Board decided that an increase of $6 should be granted. The strikers would agree to nothing except an immediate increase of $6 a week, Mr. Fillmore said.

The meeting was attended by Major Charles J. Jones of the Quartermaster's Department, and it is expected that the Nation War Labor Board will intervene tomorrow to attempt mediation.

TO HELP EX-SOLDIERS.

Sergeant Major Has a Plan to Get Them Jobs After the War.

A plan has been devised by Sergt. Major Eugene Greenhut, N. A., stationed at Camp Upton, by which the surplus of labor which will probably occur at the end of the war may be met without dislocating the industries of the country and without causing hardships to the soldiers who return from France.

Sergeant Major Greenhut proposes that the President appoint a permanent commission which will undertake to obtain profitable work for all honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines. The commission, which will be composed of representatives of all branches of industry, will allot the men to the industries where vacancies occur and for which they are suited.

If after the allotment of soldiers is made there are more than 100,000 soldiers without positions, the commission should recommend that Congress authorize the opening of farming lands for agricultural development, of which more than 200,000,000 acres are available. Upon re-enlistment for five years in an army for agricultural restoration an honorably discharged soldier would obtain part ownership of the land to which his division is allotted. Each division, consisting of 27,152 men, should have 4,345,000 acres, which would allow 160 acres for each man. The expense of the division and the profits should be held in common and divided among the members of the division according to their rank.

FIGHT OVER DOCTOR'S BODY.

Shipment West Awaits Court Decision of Undertakers' Dispute.

A summons was issued yesterday for Frank E. Campbell, an undertaker, to appear before Magistrate Marsh in Yorkville Court today on complaint of Nicholas Brown, another undertaker, with an establishment at 170 First Avenue. Pending the decision of the court the body of Dr. Frederick Skinner, a prominent physician of Davenport, Iowa, who died after an operation for appendicitis in the Post Graduate Hospital, where he was taking a special advanced course in medicine, will remain in the Campbell establishment at 1,970 Broadway, although arrangements had been made, it is said, to send the body to Davenport last night.

According to Mr. Campbell, one of the hospital authorities ordered the removal of the body to his place last Saturday, after he had obtained permission from a brother-in-law of Dr. Skinner, and prepared the body for shipment to Davenport. Henry Williams, the brother-in-law, arrived here Sunday, and, according to Mr. Campbell, completed arrangements for making the shipment last night.

In the meantime Mr. Brown communicated with the family, and it is said got permission from the widow of the doctor to make the arrangements. When he went to get the body, however, he was informed that Mr. Campbell had it.

When the Board of Health learned of the court action it refused to grant a permit for the removal of the body until the case had been disposed of by the court.

PASTOR WAGNER DEAD.

He Declared Against Quiet While German Iniquity Lasts.

PARIS, May 13.—Pastor Charles Wagner, author of the widely known book, "The Simple Life," is dead at his home here. He was 67 years old.

Pastor Wagner, one of the leading exponents of "the simple life," about which his book is based, began his career as a clergyman in Alsace, after the war of 1870. Several years later he moved to Paris, where he achieved fame as a scholar and preacher. He had been a student at Strasburg during the Franco-Prussian War, and as he said in a message he sent to America last year, praising the spirit of Alsace, he had seen the beginning of the new and painful era for Alsace. He discovered that if he remained there he would be nothing more than a "corporal" to the Emperor, so he left, refusing to be a "spiritual gendarme."

Last week Pastor Wagner sent a message to the American people warning against a German peace and declaring that "to go on leading a quiet life when iniquity is flooding the earth is to become an accomplice of iniquity." The message made an especial appeal to pacifists.

Letters to The Times on Various Topics Related to the War

HELP FOR RUSSIA

Work For a Council of Representatives of the Allies.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To help the people of Russia it is very important to be careful not to make any mistakes. If we will use common sense and ordinary judgment, we will see what happened to the people of Russia from the first day they began to wave the red flag right after they were relieved of the Czar and his Government. The last Duma took certainly a great part in that movement, and some of its members became leaders—men of such calibre as Professor Milukoff, who knows what it means to work for the benefit of the people; Mr. Kerensky, who always works for the benefit of the people; Mr. Tereshenko, who never had anything against the benefits for the people, and Prince Lvoff, who, on account of his name and reputation, an honored son of an honored race, is qualified to work unselfishly for the benefit of the people; Gustschkov, also well known as a liberal, to be trusted with the people's affairs. Such men are certainly capable of representing even so vast a number as the 180,000,000 of Russians. But what became of their ability? Is it not a fact that Professor Milukoff, as a highly educated man and broad minded, resigned on account of his personal opinion, without taking into consideration his plain duty to the 180,000,000 of people? His place was taken immediately by Mr. Tereshenko, who transferred his ability from Minister of Finance to that of Foreign Affairs. Mr. Gootschkov resigned as Minister of War, and Mr. Kerensky, being Minister of Justice, transferred his ability also to the former's department, an entirely new one to him. And what did he do immediately? He gave out a manifest, as Minister of War, (army and navy,) to the soldiers and sailors which gave them the right to ignore all discipline. Probably he thought this an act of justice. But knowing his people, as a capable man, it was certainly necessary for him to see what the results from such liberal acts would be. His acts transplanted the barbarism from the officers who had served under the Czar's Government to the soldiers, who were supposed to be under his, Kerensky's, leadership. (And to a large extent they even refused to obey this leader's orders.)

Then Mr. Kerensky, after the resignation of Prince Lvoff, also took over the name of the position of Premier, and suddenly a General, Korniloff, brought forward an idea to Mr. Kerensky of re-establishing the discipline in the army, lack of which interfered with giving proper support loyally to Russia and to her allies, (and I believe a number of other Generals who were at least entitled to some respect approved General Korniloff's suggestions.) But Mr. Kerensky called the red flag to his support against such enemies as Korniloff, who had been intrusted by him with the authority of a General. Then he proved his ability by obtaining enough support to get rid of Korniloff, yet he never was able to find in Petrograd, or in any other city, Nikolai Lenine, who had been rumored as a German spy! I believe Mr. Kerensky used his ability as Minister of Justice, as Minister of War, as commander of the Russian Army, as Premier of the Russian Cabinet, to find Lenine, but unfortunately his ability did not give the proper results. He also paid no attention to another man, Trotzky. If Trotzky was not seen by him, he was certainly known by him to be in Petrograd. As a matter of fact, he was known to have been made President of a certain workman's council. But still Mr. Kerensky's ability never was used to find out how responsible or irresponsible were his coworkers. I believe, to his great surprise, Mr. Kerensky found Lenine and Trotzky in his powerful position, and instead of saving Russia he saved himself, disappearing from Petrograd, disappearing from the world, but principally disappearing from the Lenine and Trotzky régime.

And what do we know of Russia at the present time? The best part of Russia has been given away to Germany. The eastern front was cleaned up for Germany. The resources and food and raw material have been given away to Germany. The promises from the new Governments since the dethronement of Nicholas to prevent starvation, to give land to the peasants, to establish a stable Government, to draw up a Constitution, to give to the people the benefits of representation in the Government through their choice of men from among them, all have failed. But they have received in return for their trust and belief German barbarism and treaties made over their heads between a fictitious organization and a German autocracy—a combination which calls themselves "Bolsheviki"! The people of Russia are not represented, but misled by these Bolsheviki. The Russian peasant and the good workers, who are in the majority, are honest enough to have good faith in their leaders, but only when they see honest acts from their leaders. It seems to me that at the present time in Russia it is not the question of who the Russians want to lead them, when they have been so disappointed in their best men and when even their red flag has failed them. I believe that the Russian people are in the same position as they were at the time when, unfortunately, I was there, for a Russian subject never had the right to think for himself. First, he was ordered how and what to think by the Czar's Government, then by a temporary provisional Government (with the slight difference of a promise) he was led to think that he was getting liberty and recognition of his manhood. Now they are in the old position where there are no promises, but simply orders which come not from a Russian but from a Prussian gentleman. But the trouble is that a Prussian gentleman has no gentle blood.

The situation in Russia is bad. The people of Russia need leaders. But leaders who understand what they are saying when they appeal to their allies for help. Not such leaders as Kerensky, who, after he had lost Riga because he had dismissed discipline from the army, said: "Where is the British Navy? Why are they not helping Russia? Russia has struggled enough during this war, and is not receiving the proper support." Russia needs leaders who could not raise such arguments in time of war, realizing full well that German propaganda is plentifully represented in Russia, and will immediately take advantage—offering from an enemy more support than they are receiving from their own allies.

The people of Russia are entitled to support and help, and it seems to me that the most important help is that which will establish Russia as a nation, under the protection of democracy. Russia needs leaders who shall have support, in an advisory capacity, from a number of men who represent each of her allied nations. I do not see why it should take so long for the Russian leaders to draw up a Constitution, or why they should establish such a number of political parties. For it is a fact that instead of a Constitution, Russia has been burdened with political parties. If the United States, Great Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, and Japan each should spare just a few men who should build up a commission for the purpose of helping the people of Russia to establish a provisional Government, a standing army decently paid, with due consideration that their families must be protected against starvation, a proper division of land to each soldier and his family, a liberal Constitution, a secured position from which to drive Germany from Russian territory and to fight for democracy, the results will be satisfactory.

It is necessary in Russia to have a political party. Let them establish, through the guidance of this joint commission, a political party which shall be called something like "Russian Democratic Party," with a platform which shall represent the best ideals of all the parties now in existence. Socialism is not a food to feed to the Russian people. I believe that they are now convinced of the misrepresentations of socialistic ideas. Russia needs a party at present which everybody can feel that he must join, that it is his duty to join. I do not believe that the Russian people (except possibly a number of leaders) are in favor of a number of parties, which can only weaken the ability to secure democracy, for they stand for a victory which will bring them democracy, and were it not for German propaganda they would certainly understand what democracy really means and that democracy can be procured through the Allies only, not through the success of the Kaiser.

Russia must be helped morally and commercially to overcome the difficulties which were brought in by socialistic and anarchistic ideas, the results of which she now sees. If any socialistic ideas could help Russia, then they should have them. But Russian people are distinctly religious, and I do not believe that they can derive any benefits from any such system which abandons itself to propositions of free love and to the denial of the existence of a God. However, an idea is not the property of a political party. Russia must see that she is supported by men of ideas, and not by parties.

I believe that Russia can get together a good strong army, but I do not believe she has enough officers for it. It would be a great help if the allied nations could spare enough officers to guide the Russian officers how to manage their military affairs. I believe Russia will trust the Allies a great deal more than Germany or her allies. If it is true that the Russian people are afraid of Japan, then I am sure this is also a part of German propaganda. A substantial army from Japan will gladly be welcomed by the people of Russia, (certainly exclusive of the Bolsheviki and the Germans,) and I do not believe they feel less friendly to Japan now than they did toward Germany before the war. They know that Germany, even in peace time, controlled them commercially, and such a fact affects a nation more than a war which took place thirteen years ago. If there exists a weakness in the friendship toward Japan, it is a manufactured weakness, made in Germany.

A Southern View That It Isn't Too High and Shouldn't Be Fixed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of May 2, in writing up the meeting of the Cotton Manufacturers' Association at the Biltmore, you quoted a man from Greenville, S. C., who said, in part:

> The farmers are making big returns and the South as a whole is experiencing the greatest prosperity in its history. Cotton is selling for 30 cents a pound or more. Formerly 10 cents a pound was considered a good price. Three years ago cotton sold for 6 cents a pound; two weeks ago I sold some at 37 cents a pound.

This would indicate a wide margin of profit between 6 cents a pound three years ago and 37 cents a pound two weeks ago. Speculators in cotton futures have made and lost huge sums of money during the last two years. Cotton farmers, producing the actual staple, have not been among the big winners. During the time of 10-cent cotton pine lumber for building purposes cost $18 per thousand feet delivered, while it now costs $36 per thousand; turning plows that cost $12.50 now bring as high as $26.50; mixed feed that used to cost us $24 per ton now is hard to get at $65 per ton, and everything else in proportion.

The profit of the cotton farmer is the difference between the cost per pound of making his crop and the price per pound he receives for it. Phillips County, Arkansas, produces about 70,000 bales of cotton annually, and the following average figures covering the last few seasons are rather interesting:

Season.	Avar. Price.	Avar. Cost.
1914-15	.0813 per lb.	.0876 per lb.
1915-16	.1323 per lb.	.0817 per lb.
1916-17	.1976 per lb.	.1312 per lb.
1917-18	.30 per lb.	.2478 per lb.

The present crop will cost very much more than last year's, and, unless the price keeps pace with the rising costs, the Southern farmer is going to find himself just where he was in 1914, when he was obliged to unload his crop at a price considerably below the actual cost of production. Many farmers and business men have fooled themselves into thinking that high prices for cotton indicated big profits, but when their accounts are carefully audited and analyzed they learn differently.

Now, as to price fixing. How can Congress or any one else fix a reasonable sale price for a product the cost of which cannot be determined until after the crop has been made, gathered and ginned?

AIR VIEW OF THE DRIVE.

An American Aviator's Story of the German Advance to Montdidier.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am inclosing a letter received today from my son, Robert Bentley Hoeber, (son of the late Arthur Hoeber, well known artist and critic.) He is a member of the Lafayette Flying Corps and has been in active service over the lines since November of last year. Is at present with the famous escadrille of the Cigognes, the old squadron of the Ace flyer of France, Guynemer. His appointment to this division was so satisfactory to himself that he felt it best to decline an offer from the United States, feeling that he could do bigger and better work where he is.

* * * You remember my writing you from down near Rheims. Well, on the afternoon of the 25th of March word came from the commandant of the group, Captain Ormond, "leave in half an hour." Well, we did and did some tall hurrying to do it, and went up to Montdidier. Perhaps you have been reading a little about Montdidier. We were at the camp at Meslin St. George, just about ten miles west. That night we stayed at Montdidier. Had supper and slept there, and the next morning out over the lines.

The night we had dinner in Montdidier at the big hotel, (I have forgotten the name,) the town was packed with refugees just streaming in, poor devils, pushing baby carriages filled with their worldly belongings and the steady stream of French and English camions, autos, big guns going up—more traffic than that town had ever seen before. * * * Our officers in the meantime had gotten us all billeted in various houses and after dinner we went around hunting up our rooms. Every one had to be out on the field at 6 A. M., rain or shine, and as each man would come in he would go right over to the Commandant's Office and make a report of what he had seen and immediately this information would be telegraphed or rather phoned to G. H. Q. Never have I seen so much going on. The lines—no trenches, just open work—were just a heavy wave of white and black smoke, mostly white, the boches just coming up in herds, the lines changing every half hour, but no one excited at all and work going on despite alterations.

That night and the next we stayed in Montdidier, then the next day at noon we left for another camp between Senlis and Crepy en Valois, and that night the boches took Faverolles, just the other side of Montdidier, and that same afternoon Montdidier. * * *

Down at the old camp, between Crepy and Senlis, we kept on working just about the same, two patrols a day, as a rule, and then, the 28th, Captain Ormond sent me up north to talk with the English around Amiens, because I spoke English and French. Rotten day it was, and I took my old bimitrailleuse, 220 h.-p., and went up and had a long talk with them, gave them all the information I had, and they gave me all of theirs. Captain Ormond had given me letters introducing me to whom it might concern, and so I talked with a lot of Colonels, Captains, Majors, &c., and then left for home.

Thought I'd follow the line back, and did for a while, the clouds only being about 800 to 1,000 feet high, and a lot of mist and no sun at all. First thing I knew, out of the clouds came four boche monoplanes, and we manoeuvred for a while, and then I sent one of them down in flames, but by that time the other three got around me, and I had to go up into the clouds to get away from them, climbed about 2,000 feet, but couldn't find the sun, so came down, my compass just spinning like a top, as the ordinary compass does always in the clouds or mist.

When I came down I was all balled up, but the monoplanes had gone, so I went down and shot up camions, &c. Got a staff car coming along the road, and he burst into flames, the boches shooting all the time with shrapnel and machine gun at me from the ground. Well, again I went up to try and get the sun, and again I came down completely lost, always the same story, dive on some artillery or machine gun, and then up into the clouds.

Finally the fifth time I went up through the clouds I found the sun. Well, you never had anything look so good in all your life, because you see, then, I didn't care whether my compass went or not. I put the sun on my left; it was midday and I knew I was going home. * * * For half an hour I ran that way and never saw the ground, just a solid platform of white, beautifully white, clouds, and when I came down through them I was out over the Atlantic Ocean, or rather the North Sea, with my motor going in fits and starts. I managed to make line and set her down at an English field. * * *

They took me into the bureau and there I explained who I was, and so on, showing my letters from Captain Ormond, and the Major commanding immediately gave me a plane, a two-seater, and a pilot, and sent me right over to General Headquarters of the Royal Flying Corps, where I was taken in to see Major Gen. G., who is in command of the R. F. C., and he made me sit down and wanted my story. I showed him my papers and gave him all the information we had—which he didn't have—and was awfully glad to get. * * *

After dinner—and a wonderful dinner it was—General G.—it was raining by that time—sent me back to Paris in a ripping good staff car. And from Paris the next morning I got a 6 o'clock train out to Crepy en Valois, and from there phoned for a tractor.

They had had no word from me and supposed me brought down. I talked with Captain Ormond, and then he said, "Hurry up and get lunch and we will go down and see the big fellows and tell them all about it." So down we went and had quite a talk with the General and a lot of French commandants, Colonels, and heaven only knows who all. They seemed sort of glad to get the maps and made me tell the whole story. So there you are.

Our Loan Cheers Canada.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The splendid result of the Liberty Loan drive is, I am sure, a source of pleasure and encouragement to the people of Canada. If reports at this date are true, that there have been 17,000,000 bond buyers, one can safely say that there is no parallel to this in the financial history of the world.

Thoughts of the Older Germans on the Course of the Empire.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The subject of this war has been and is a matter of much and serious thought and worry to me, a German born, but a 100 per cent. American for more than fifty years, and, believing that there are many more Germans in this country of like feeling—yes, and in Germany as well, only the latter cannot give expression to the sentiments which I will attempt to express in the following:

It is certain that because of my appearance in this world about seventy-nine years ago, I escaped the opportunity to imbibe of the twentieth century German Kultur, thank the Lord.

I left Germany in 1862, at which time Germany consisted of some twenty-nine kingdoms, dukedoms, and other appellations. Germany at that time was the derision of all nations.

On my arrival in this country I enlisted in the army to do my part in preventing the seceding of the Southern States. I was then a believer in the republican form of government, and I did not want any of the States to leave the Union, and thus perhaps bring about conditions as they existed in Germany at that time. I admit that I was glad when, as a result of the war of 1870, Germany became united, not dreaming that it would ever use its power as it has since 1914, because it was not in the nature of the German people, as I knew them and as Americans knew them, prior to the advent of this war.

It appears to me that the change in the younger element of Germans has been brought about by the ruling party, landowners (Junkers) and the military autocracy, who have led the younger generations of Germans to believe in and acquiesce in whatever the German Government dictates, because of fear and many years of paternalism on the part of the Government, combined with military despotism, which has brought the laboring classes of Germany to a condition of serfdom as complete as the Russian peasants ever were.

In contrast to the results of German consolidation, we have today a United States of America, consisting of forty-eight States, all the people united for right and justice, of which they have already given many evidences, as for instance, in the cases of Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, China, and a number of other countries.

The great success of the Third Liberty Loan is the strongest kind of evidence that the people of all sections of the country are firmly determined to win this war.

At the time the German troops entered Belgium and the truth of the savagery of these troops in Belgium was established, I felt certain that sooner or later America would come in on the side of the Allies—oh, that it might have been sooner—or at least prepare for this event.

I have seen repeatedly in the press expressions of wonder that the people of Germany do not revolt against their Government. They would not have the slightest chance of success if they did. But let the Allies enter German territory and the world will see a revolution which will be short, and will end the régime of the "Potsdam gang" and of this devilish war; and, I hope, of all war for all time.

Talk of peace by treaty! Treaty with the devil! He will have you by hook or by crook.

Nothing but a crushing victory will accomplish the aims of the Allies or the aims of the civilized world, and to this end the American people must dedicate their all if need be.

My reason for writing this letter is to do what I can to obtain for all peoples the right to "Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." The first two I have found in America, the latter I am still in pursuit of.

As there is not and can not be such an individual as a German-American, I sign as

AN AMERICAN GERMAN BORN.

French Masons and the War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have just learned of an article in your paper (Feb. 24, 1918,) in which the Grand Orient of France is the object of notice based upon inaccuracies.

It is not our custom to reply to attacks of this nature. But on account of the circumstances, and also convinced that your good faith has been imposed upon, I request permission to refute the allegations of the author of this article.

In the first place, you should know that M. Caillaux has never been a Freemason, and that, consequently, he has played no rôle in the Grand Orient of France.

On the other hand, M. Méline and Maréchal Joffre do belong to the Grand Orient of France.

The author of the article speaks of our by-laws like one who has never read them, for it would be, indeed, difficult to find among them an interpretation of principles similar to those which he ascribes to us.

We are, he says, atheists and materialists. Now, here is what the first article of our constitution says:

> Freemasonry has for its principles mutual forbearance, respect for others and for itself, and the absolute liberty of conscience.

So that you may better understand us I send you inclosed a pamphlet: "The Freemasonry of the Grand Orient of France."

We are, he also says, at the service of a political party. Nothing is more false. In the Grand Orient of France all factions of republican opinion are represented—Democratic Republicans, Radicals, Radical Socialists, Independent Socialists, and Unified Socialists are united in our lodges in order to work together for the emancipation of human intelligence, for the independence of peoples, and for the social happiness of humanity.

But there is another allegation which has grieved us still more because it is monstrous: It is that which consists in representing us as not having fulfilled our duty toward our country. I would simply answer it by sending two official documents emanating from the Grand Orient of France and which you will find herewith inclosed: Our Circular of Dec. 13, 1914, and our Circular of Dec. 9, 1917. I have chosen them from two widely separated epochs so that you may understand that our patriotic attitude has not varied in the course of this terrible war.

I rely on your courtesy to print this letter, which constitutes a reply to the allegations of the author in the article in question.

Pray receive, Monsieur le Directeur, the assurance of my distinguished consideration.

G. CORNEAU, 33,
President Grand Orient de France.

Paris, April 12, 1918.

The first document mentioned in the letter contains a number of communications to the press:

> Aug. 2, 1914.—The Grand Orient of France and the Grand Lodge of France, in the name of French Freemasons, thank the Government for having tried all that was compatible with national dignity in the interest of world peace.
> French Freemasonry would still hope that the diplomatic efforts of the Government of the republic will bring about a peaceful solution; but, whatever may be the result of the negotiations undertaken, it pledges its entire devotion.
> Vive la France!
> Vive la Patrie!

Twenty-four hours later Germany declared war on France, and on Aug. 4 the Grand Orient, through its President, addressed the following letter to Premier Viviani:

> I have the honor to inform you that the Grand Orient of France, faithful interpreter of the patriotic sentiments of French Freemasonry, renews the assurance of our entire devotion to the Government of the republic.
> As it did in 1870, it places its premises at the disposition of the Government.
> Vive la France!

On Aug. 7, in the course of the defense of Liége, the Grand Orient of France sent the following dispatch to the Grand Orient of Belgium:

> The Grand Orient of France, through its friends of the Grand Orient of Belgium, warmly congratulates the brave and heroic Belgian nation, whose proud and courageous attitude is hailed with respect and enthusiasm by all Frenchmen.

On Dec. 18 the Council of the Order passed a resolution condemning German Freemasons for having become the dupes of their Government, ending with the words: "Vive la France! Vivent les Alliés!"

The document of Dec. 9, 1917, is an Order in Council addressed by President Corneau to all Freemasons. It declares that the present war is a continuation of that begun in 1789 with the French Revolution to decide the question "Which is right: Truth or falsehood, good or evil, liberty or autocracy."

It declares:

> The return of Alsace-Lorraine to the mother country is a problem much more European than French, without which solution Europe can never be pacific with a durable peace. The annexation of Alsace-Lorraine has brought misfortune upon Europe. Its disannexation is both a symbol and a guarantee of safety.

The document praises President Wilson for having placed the war upon a great moral basis:

> Moral truth is alone capable of purifying conflicts. The entente of the allied nations will augment it, and their common program will realize it all the more, as it will be inscribed in the spirit of the Governments as in the conscience of the peoples.

And it ends with the words:

"Let us lift up our souls. Let us cleave to the implacable and serene decision which made brothers of all our citizens in August, 1914. The same desire animates us. We must fan its flame in every heart. Never have we needed more calmness, a holy union, discipline. Never has the legend inscribed on the glorious old banner of the Grand Orient of France been more true: 'One for all—all for one.'"

MARINES' SIGNAL CORPS.

A Good Service for Men with Some Special Knowledge.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A great many young men in civil life have asked and inquired if the Marine Corps has a Signal Battalion, which, I believe, if you would insert this letter in your paper, would be a good way to inform the public in general that the Marine Corps has a Signal Battalion, and its home station is at the Navy Yard, Philadelphia. The Signal Battalion has a school of instruction for training electricians, radio men, telegraphers, linemen, repairmen, gas engineers, motor cyclists, and operators of switchboards. You may state that we are in need also of several good carpenters, cobblers, and horseshoers for duty with this battalion.

A good thing to mention is the fact that when a man enlists in the Signal Battalion he does not have to go to the recruit depot, but is sent direct to the Navy Yard, Philadelphia, where he is given his military training as well as his training in the branches named above. Chances for promotion in the Signal Battalion to the noncommissioned grades are excellent, and men with technical knowledge are almost certain of promotion. I might further state that all Marine Corps officers are being commissioned from the enlisted personnel of the Marine Corps.

Many men wonder what kind of company they would have in the Signal Battalion. This battalion is represented by thirty or more colleges, universities, and almost every profession known—civil engineers, lawyers, law clerks, draftsmen, machinists, chauffeurs, motor cyclists, repairmen, linemen, switchboard operators, students, stenographers, &c.

The Marine Corps Signal Battalion offers to likely men the chance of patriotic service, cosmopolitan association, liberal education, and technical training.

Any young man desiring to enter this battalion should drop a line to the Commanding Officer, Signal Battalion, Marine Barracks, Philadelphia, Penn., who will be glad to give him any information he desires, or see him here and take him over our work.

A FRENCH CELEBRATION.

How New York Welcomed the First French Republic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You expressed well in today's issue of THE TIMES our enthusiastic cordiality for the French Chasseurs Alpins and the Anzacs. You compared it with the appeal made by the Frenchmen of Revolutionary days, and that of our own men returning from the wars of 1812, 1861, and 1898.

Possibly even a closer comparison might be made with the celebrations held throughout the United States on the anniversaries of the fall of the monarchy in France. French freedom was declared by their National Assembly on Sept. 21, 1792. The first anniversary in New York was prevented by the yellow fever which raged, primarily in Philadelphia, in September, 1793; but in the following year enthusiasm was great.

Several "uniform companies" met at "Citizen Hunter's Hotel," (formerly Corre's Hotel, at 69 Broadway, just below Rector Street,) and drank toasts in honor of the day. Patriotism and partisanship ran high in those years of "Jacobinism," which flourished in New York as well as Paris, stimulated by a war between France and England which threatened to involve the United States. Some of the toasts in the 1794 celebration of French freedom show the spirit and temper of the time, and any one of these might be used verbatim today. As published in The Daily Advertiser of Sept. 24, 1794, these were:

> May the banners of freedom be permanently displayed to the ruin of despotism.
> The National Convention of France—May the wisdom of their councils convince posterity that the virtuous representatives of a free people is [are] the rock of their political salvation.
> May the present thirst for equal liberty extend its happy influence through every country and nation on the globe.
> May all the nations of the earth drink deep of the cup of liberty without being intoxicated.
> May every emigrant to this country become a real American in principle.

The Tammany Society also, democratic then as now, celebrated "with the patriots of France in this city," and among the toasts which they responded to were the following, printed later in the same newspaper:

> May the arms of France destroy the thrones of despots and secure the liberties of Europe.
> May the free nations of the earth cultivate the principles of education and knowledge as the best security of their rights.
> The punctuality of the French Republic terrible to tyrants.
> May the cause of liberty be triumphant throughout the world.
> The Day; may America be ever ready to re-echo the triumphant shouts of Liberty from the shores of Gallia.
> May a dissemination of republican principles diminish the number of enemies to France this year, as much as the valor of her citizens has done the last.

The published report of the event stated also that "A variety of patriotic songs and amusements suitable to the occasion evinced the harmony and zeal in the cause of liberty, which has long characterized this society." How like the hearty greetings given everywhere to the "Blue Devils" of France last week! On Saturday during the entire evening and particularly after the theatre, Times Square was crowded as on Election Night. In a miniature theatre on a wagon, drawn up at the curb on the Seventh Avenue side at Forty-third Street, a group of these sturdy warriors from the battlefront sang "The Marseillaise." Doubtless, few in the crowd knew the words of the song, but they could not fail to catch the heroic sentiment and spirit with which it was rendered. "The Marseillaise" is occasionally sung nowadays in our churches and public schools. I have not happened to hear it. It was not sung in my grammar school days, doubtless because there was no occasion for it then, and even now it may be safely said that the English words are generally unknown to popular assemblages. To read them, as to hear them in their native language, is to know the meaning of freedom, to feel the strong and happy ties which unite the hearts and lives of free men everywhere.

Spies and Plotters.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A "spy," according to the present legal interpretations of the term as enunciated by our civil and military authorities, is one who, in the zone of actual hostilities, endeavors to obtain information, by sailing under false colors, to the detriment of our armed forces. Such a person, when apprehended, is promptly court-martialed. Conversely, any private citizen, of any allegiance whatsoever, who conspires, plots, or actively engages, outside the zone of hostilities, to frustrate the manufacture for, or delivery of supplies and munitions to, our armed forces is, when apprehended, merely subject to trial in our civil courts and, pending his trial, is admitted to bail—if same be forthcoming—and is free to continue his nefarious work (unless rearrested) till his case is called. If convicted, at best he merely receives a sentence absurdly inadequate and which reflects the infantile minds of those who drew the laws under which the conviction is obtained.

The "spy" and civilian marplot are equally dangerous, and to argue the contrary gives good ground for questioning the soundness of mind of the one advancing such theories. Any one who has taken the trouble to observe the trend of court proceedings of the present time cannot help being struck and aghast to see that both Justices (as a whole) and lawyers seem possessed with a mania to see into how many parts they can split a hair (statute) instead of endeavoring to uphold the majesty and dignity of the law. There is no question that many laws are loosely drawn, but unless a law clearly states in its preamble the object of the law, and later on what constitutes breaking thereof, it should be declared unconstitutional.

The question, "What to do with the technical spy and the civilian marplot, and the manner of dealing with them when apprehended?" should have the same answer for both—court-martial.

Better Mail Service to France.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

When the importance of writing regularly to the boys in France is urged so forcibly, why isn't more attention given to increasing the efficiency of the mail service? Under such conditions as the boys are facing "over there" it is a great hardship to be compelled to wait ten or twelve weeks for news from home. The advice to write cheerful letters, and to write often, &c., is fine as far as it goes, but if these same letters are held until they are three or four months old before they are delivered, the effect is bad.

A National Flower.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Congressman Stephens of Texas advocated in the House two years ago the adoption of the American mountain laurel as the national flower of the United States. Belgium has just adopted the forget-me-not as its national flower.

The time is ripe for America to adopt its own, and the Florists' Exchange, issue of May 11, 1918, advocates the mountain laurel.

NORWAY LOOKS WEST

Germany May Gain Elsewhere in Scandinavia, but Not There.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We make free to send you herewith an article translated from the French publication, "France - Scandinavie," written by O. J. Storm. Mr. Storm is a prominent business man and publisher in Christiania, Norway. His views on political, commercial, and economical questions invariably receive marked attention. The inclosed article is considered representative of the enlightened opinion of the majority of the Norwegians today.

PUBLIC OPINION IN NORWAY DURING THE WAR.

When, on the 4th of August, 1914, England declared war upon Germany a feeling of relief prevailed from one end to the other in our country. The most enlightened people saw in this act a guarantee against seizure of our ports by Germany, which act inevitably would have thrown us into the war.

Norway, as one of the foremost maritime countries of the world, instinctively felt that German freedom of the seas simply meant freedom for Germany to coerce the weaker nations—a fact which has been amply confirmed by practical experience.

Since the outbreak of the war the great majority of the Norwegian nation has sided with the Entente. The few who upheld Germany could be found among officers actuated more by their appreciation of Germany's military organization than by a feeling of sympathy—as well as among engineers, physicians, and other practitioners being graduated from German high schools, universities, and hospitals. * * *

The siege of Liége caused the utmost excitement in Norway, and as the Germans advanced through Belgium and Flanders the indignant feeling increased. However, faith in the destiny of France was never lost, even at the moment of the German march against Paris.

Each new violation of the international law and the laws of humanity by the Germans lessened whatever Norwegian sympathies existed for the latter nation. The torpedoing of the Lusitania, the Belgian deportations, the execution of Miss Cavell, the numberless brutal violations of which the German Army has made itself responsible, awoke among the Norwegian nation high indignation and the respect for the Germans fell considerably. This is particularly noticeable among the population interested in maritime matters. However, it is the submarine war that contributed more than anything else toward awakening a bitter feeling in Norway against everything German. How could it be otherwise when every day brings us news of the loss of Norwegian vessels and Norwegian crews? Not only by the mere fact of torpedoing but also by shelling of the lifeboats after these have left the sinking craft.

In the near future there will appear in the French language compiled briefs duly sworn to in the Admiralty courts relating the most outrageous sinkings perpetrated by German submarines and affecting Norwegian merchantmen. A complete collection of this evidence has already been published in the Norwegian language, and will constitute a lasting and conclusive proof of the cruel and wild manners of the submarine commanders toward peaceful sailors of a neutral country. Their affidavits will impart the most vivid pictures of the tragedies enacted on the high seas.

As a result of the submarine war, Norway has lost up to the present day around 800 vessels, representing 1,500,000 tons, which loss at the present price of tonnage represents in money lost approximately $400,000,000. More than 1,000 Norwegian men have perished. Taking the proportional population of the two countries into consideration, this equals 26,000 men if Norway could have counted the same number of inhabitants as Germany. This number probably exceeds the total German losses on the high seas since the beginning of the war. The purpose pursued in conducting the submarine war in such a savage way has not only been to inflict damages upon us and upon the Allies by sinking the greatest possible number of vessels but also to frighten our sailors, and in this way thinking to bring our navigation to a stop.

The plan has been a complete failure, as the rescued sailors offered their services again as soon as they reached home. In fact, at the present time, thousands of seamen are awaiting the opportunity to embark.

Germany has not been satisfied with waging the submarine war upon us. German agents have committed many hostile acts and have violated our neutrality within our own borders. Not only was our country invaded by German spies, but couriers of the German Foreign Office availed themselves for many months of their diplomatic privileges to introduce into our country explosives and hundreds of bombs which were intended to be placed on board our ships and probably also to blow up bridges and ships in case of war. German agents carrying pestiferous microbes and poisons have also been arrested in Norway. * * *

One of the greatest difficulties which will confront Germany immediately after the war will be exactly that of importing foodstuffs and raw materials, while at the same time her manufacturers hardly will be in a position to meet the competition owing to the heavy taxes and to the scarcity of labor which will prevail.

A migratory movement of German industry toward Denmark, where German manufacturers backed by German capital are erecting factories and creating business enterprises, is already in evidence. The same applies to Sweden, where German capital was largely invested even before the war. As regards Norway, a large part of German capital invested in this country has been withdrawn, and we should see to it that it does not return. Being secured against invasion of German capital is the most important economical question for the Norwegians. Our interests suggest the advisability of closer intellectual and economic relations with the countries of Western Europe and the United States. It is from these countries that we should receive our impulses and inspirations—it is with these countries that we should enter into closer contact. Our interests have always pointed toward the west, toward the seas, and beyond the seas.

IRELAND'S PROSPERITY.

Lord Aberdeen Contrasts Conditions in Country and Cities.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have noticed a number of articles in the public press recently describing in glowing terms the supposed state of prosperity now prevailing in Ireland. If the writers of these articles had confined themselves to thus depicting only the agricultural districts a truer estimate of the present condition of the country as a whole might have been formed; for the farmers of Ireland undoubtedly share with the farmers of Great Britain, the farmers of America, the results of the present high prices for all agricultural products.

The change which has been brought about by the effect of the Land Purchase Acts, through which two-thirds of the land in Ireland is now in the hands of the occupiers, combined with the results of up-to-date agricultural education, have revolutionized rural Ireland and have made her one of the chief food suppliers to the Allies during the war.

It is hard for people to believe that in normal times, before the war, Ireland was exporting to Great Britain food to the same amount of value as that sent over by the United States of America, i. e., £33,000,000. Since that time that amount has been largely increased every year; last year 750,000 extra acres were brought under tillage.

If the same attention had been given to the urban districts of Ireland in regard to housing, the fostering of suitable industries there would have been a different Ireland at the present day.

Some extracts from a report drawn up by a special committee submitting reasons to the Irish Food Control Committee why grants for the administration expenses of cooked food depots should be continued, so as to meet the extreme distress in which many thousands of people in Dublin are living, may throw some light on the conditions which prevail in that city.

ABERDEEN AND TEMAIR.

New York, May 7, 1918.

[Inclosure.]

DUBLIN COOKED FOOD DEPOTS.

Statement by the Committee of Investigation.

* * * The reason why such a grant should be necessary in Dublin, while it has not been required in Great Britain, depends on the conditions of the working classes in this city. These conditions differ in a very marked degree from those prevailing in English cities.

Employment is poor at the best of times in Dublin. At present it is very seriously curtailed. The Port of Dublin is frequently closed for three, or even four, days in a week, and even when it is open the amount of shipping is much below the average, hence the quay laborers are having much less employment than usual. The ordinary Dublin industries are necessarily hindered by these restrictions on the trade of the port, and many of them have to dismiss a considerable proportion of their employes because of the shortage of material arising from this and other causes. * * *

In England industries have been interfered with as seriously, but there has been no curtailment, but rather an increase, of employment, because of the enormous demand for munition work and allied industries. The Labor Gazette for January, 1918, gives the percentage of unemployed among trade unionists as .7 for 1917, as compared with 3.3 in 1914. In Dublin there is very little munition work to take the place of the local industries which have suffered, and the demand for labor has, in consequence, fallen off. The demand for workers in England, as well as the power of English organized labor to secure increased pay to meet the increased cost of living, has brought about a very marked rise in wages; and the high wages paid to munition workers insure a high standard for all labor. In Dublin the rise in wages has been very much less, and is not commensurate with the rise in the cost of living.

There are in Dublin a considerable proportion of men whose weekly wage falls below $6, and some whose wage is below $5, while women's wages are mostly under $4, and in many cases as low as $1 weekly. * * *

It is the unanimous opinion of the members of our committee, all of whom have direct knowledge of the conditions of different sections of the poor of Dublin, * * * that the diet of many thousands in Dublin consists mainly of bread and tea, supplemented by potatoes and dripping when it can be got.

The health of a community fed in this manner is of necessity low. If proof of this were necessary it could be supplied by the appalling figures of infant mortality in Dublin, the number of deaths of children under one year of age being 1,237 out of 7,657 born in 1916. This high rate is unfortunately not only found in the war years; it shows rather that Dublin has suffered from bad conditions for many years, though they have become worse recently. The present abnormal distress and semi-starvation press more heavily on a population which was already living at or below the poverty line; and the future will show grave and awful results from the present disastrous lowering of standards already too low.

It is necessary to point out that every effort at improved feeding will do something to mitigate these results. Already we have evidence of the marked improvement in the health of children of school age since the Provision of School Meals act was put into operation. And, on a smaller scale, those working at the Cooked Food Depots have noticed the marked improvement in the appearance of men and women who have been using these depots for the past ten months, men and women whose former dinner of bread and tea has been replaced by the more balanced ration supplied them at the depots. There are nine depots working under our committee. * * *

We do not consider that our scheme can fully meet the needs of the city workers for better subsistence; but we think it has done much to lessen the serious distress due to the conditions we have indicated. As far as we can see, such an alleviation will be even more necessary in the immediate future. The situation is abnormal, and demands special treatment. The methods of dealing with the food crisis in England, where the principal object is to economize food, are not sufficient here, where no improvement in the machinery of distribution would enable the poorly paid workers to obtain sufficient food for a minimum subsistence ration. None of the ordinary sources of public aid, no ordinary methods of administrative regulations, seem fitted to cope with the situation, the urgency of which is due to our failure to share in the vast industrial expansion in England, while we share to the full in the increased cost of living.

THE COTTON MARKET

Desire of Operators to Cover Chief Factor in Net Gain of from 43 to 51 Points.

The local cotton market continued to be a trading and speculative one yesterday, but maintained a remarkably steady and at times firm tone, with no very wide fluctuations. The short interest remains a dominant factor, and the desire of operators on this side to cover, induced by continued unfavorable weather in Texas and Oklahoma, as shown by the daily map, was the largest factor in raising prices on the day's trading to net gains of from 43 to 51 points.

The market opened firm at an advance of from 5 to 22 points, with a number of sellers of last Friday and Saturday bidding quite briskly for contracts, July being a particular object of their attentions. After they had carried the market up some 60 or 70 points, however, this demand appeared to have been largely satisfied, while some private weather reports spoke of fair and warmer weather in the Southwest, to some extent confirmed by the official forecast. The map did not look good to the traders, however, and after prices had sagged back 20 to 30 points, they began to bid again, and the highest point of the day was reached fairly late in the afternoon, although not held under realizing, whose volume and extent showed plainly the speculative character of much of the business.

An estimate of domestic mill consumption for April, putting it at 547,000 bales, as compared with 552,000 a year ago, attracted some attention, but mostly retrospectively, as confirmatory of general estimates of the underlying causes of the recent declines.

It was announced yesterday that the Allen Property Custodian would sell 5,800 bales of cotton at auction on the floor of the Exchange on May 22. This is believed to be the last lot of German-owned cotton left in this neighborhood. There were no exports yesterday. Southern spot markets were unchanged except Houston, which was 50 points higher.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

Supplies of wheat continue to decrease, owing to the small movement from the farms and the steady demand for shipment to Europe. The visible supply in the United States decreased 822,000 bushels last week, bringing the total down to only 1,872,000, compared with 33,080,000 last year. The Canadian visible, however, gained 892,000, and the total supply now in the United States and Canada is 7,862,000 bushels. The outlook for the new crop continues highly favorable, and if no disaster occurs during the balance of the season it seems reasonably assured that the production will be far in excess of home requirements.

RYE.

The local market was weak at $2.25 cost and freight New York, in sympathy with a 20c decline in Minneapolis, where cash rye was quoted at $2.30.

CORN.

The corn market moved in a very feverish manner, and after sharp fluctuations both were closed firm at the top, with the July position in Chicago showing net gains of 2¼c. The visible supply showed a decrease for the week of 687,000 bushels, bringing the total to 15,424,000, compared with 4,470,000 a year ago. In the local cash market prices were irregular; kiln-dried No. 3 yellow quoted at $1.65; No. 4 yellow at $1.50, cost and freight New York.

OATS.

Fears of congestion in the May position appeared to be the leading factor in the oats market. At least shorts in May were active buyers and after a decline of ¾c, to 72c, in Chicago that month advanced 3c and the whole list closed strong at the top with net gains of 1⅛c to 2¼c. The visible supply gained 683,000 bushels for the week and the total was 21,396,000, compared with 24,681,000 last year. The local cash market was firm, natural quoted at 83½c to 85c, clipped white 83½c to 87c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

A decline of 10 to 15 points in the market for hogs caused an easier tone in the provision list under scattered selling. The late firmness in grain, however, brought about a rally and the market closed at about the top with lard and ribs showing comparatively little change, although pork was lower than the final of Saturday. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 54,000, estimated for Tuesday 26,000; Kansas City received 9,000, and Omaha 8,000 hogs.

COFFEE.

The coffee market was very quiet again yesterday, but developed a little more interest and a steadier tone in the late trading, with the close showing a net advance of 2@5 points. The local spot market was dull at 8¾c for Rio 7s and 11c for Santos 4s.

SUGAR.

The shipping situation continues to be very favorable and a steady volume of raws from Cuba and Porto Rico has been coming to this market the past week or so without interruption. Refiners are now enabled to work mostly full time, with a consequent increase in meltings, and the situation generally looks bright for the balance of this month and during June, and the trade expects that arrivals during May will exceed the 300,000-ton mark and may reach 350,000 tons. The International Sugar Committee reported the following purchases: 19,000 bags Cubas, May shipment, at 4.985c, cost and freight; 10,500 tons Porto Ricos, at 6.005c, cost, insurance, and freight, May shipment, and 15,000 bags Santo Domingos, at 4.749c, cost, insurance, and freight, (for Canada,) May shipment to New York.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE

Profit taking in heavy volume in the final hour of the market yesterday on the Consolidated Stock Exchange caused a sharp reaction, the entire list losing a greater part of the earlier gains. Closing prices, however, showed substantial net advances and the general tone of the market was strong. Business throughout the session was active.

Following the Drive

Behind the third successful mobilization of our money that is to help crush Kaiserism comes a demand for safe investments in which to place our surplus.

Because they are essential in war and peace, Public Utility companies continue to hold their place in the front rank of sound investments. Their short term securities are particularly adapted to present needs, combining unusual safety with a yield around

Reaction Follows Further Big Advance—Government Bonds Lower—Money at 4%.

The opening of a new week on the Stock Exchange was accompanied by all of the usual signs of a bull market impatient with past performances. The advance that followed was too rapid to be maintained and brought about its own corrective in the shape of a selling movement partly engineered by traders making sure of substantial profits shown on their long stock, and partly by professional short sellers eager to see profit taking encouraged. So rapid had been the advance earlier in the session, however, that a reaction running to 2 points in many issues did not entirely offset the day's gains and the list closed irregular but with a large majority of the stocks showing further progress. The movement in Steel was particularly interesting in view of the rapidity with which quotations were advanced last week. After going to a new high record for the year at 112, a heavy volume of liquidation effected a decline to 110, but the support received at that point, which was above the highest price made in last week's bull market soon brought about a secondary wave of buying that carried the quotation back to 110⅜ at the close. Some of the other steel issues were even less susceptible to efforts to stem the rise to permit of better distribution. Lackawanna, after dropping more than 3 points, closing with a gain of 2½, and Republic gaining 1⅝.

In the steel issues prices have undoubtedly been made by an uncontrolled demand. In some of the issues with a smaller volume of stock to be moved yesterday's fluctuations were extremely feverish. American Sumatra made a net advance of 8½ points, and Malt preferred a gain of 5⅜. Butte & Superior and General Chemical both closed 6 points above their final prices on Saturday. In Distillers the orderly pace which has been maintained under skillful market leadership was abandoned when buying orders absorbed all of the offered stock and the issue made a new high at 63⅜. Traders are either ignoring the imminent possibility of a second big offensive movement on the Western front, or they are supremely confident that the allied line will prove less yielding than before.

Heavy liquidation in the new Liberty 4¼s proved too much for the nominal support offered, and a new low level was made in the final sale at 97.80. The second 4s were less active but also weak, going to a new low price at 94.60. In both cases the lower levels appear to be evidence of the fact that people are not being influenced by the rate of return, but are disposing of their Government bonds where such securities constitute too large a proportion of their investment media.

A reflection of the easier position of the banks as shown in Saturday's statement was the establishment of 4½ per cent. as the highest price of the day for call loans. As a matter of fact, the bulk of the day's business was placed at one-half of 1 per cent. less than that. Evidence of increasing confidence in the outcome of the war was seen in a renewed demand for foreign Government issues which was particularly noticeable in the case of the Anglo-French 5s.

LONDON MARKET IS STEADY.

Fair Business Turnover in Investment Issues.

LONDON, May 13.—The stock market was steady today. There was a fair business turnover in investment issues on the basis of previous values, with the exception of Scandinavians, which were generally lower. Certain base metals, mining, and few favorite industrials and smaller priced oils were in demand. Rubber stocks, especially Dutch descriptions, received more attention, but otherwise the market was quiet.

Money was in fair demand and discount rates were quiet.

Trading Quiet on the Bourse.

PARIS, May 13.—Trading was quiet on the Bourse today. Three per cent. rentes 58 francs 75 centimes for cash. Exchange on London 27 francs 16 centimes. Five per cent. loan 87 francs 65 centimes.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Call Loans Renewed at 4½%—Time Accommodations Command 6%.

The money market yesterday was somewhat easier, banks making demand loans at as low as 2% per cent., although the renewal and ruling rate was 4½ per cent. The call money market is at present rather erratic and subject to wide fluctuations, due principally to transactions incident to Government financing. The rate for time loans, commercial and Stock Exchange, continues to rule at 6 per cent.

Air Mail Service Ready.

Postmaster W. C. Burton of Brooklyn announced yesterday that aerial mail service between New York, Philadelphia, and Washington would start tomorrow. To assure dispatch the mail should be in the main Brooklyn Post Office by 8:15 A. M. daily, although it will be received up to 9:45 A. M. Aerial mail from Washington and Philadelphia is expected to reach Brooklyn at 4 P. M. daily. The air mails at the Pennsylvania Station will close at 10:30 A. M.

A mail airplane will leave Belmont Park every week day at 11:30 A. M., and the machine from Washington and Philadelphia will land in Belmont Park at 2:30 P. M. Weight of mail will be restricted to 300 pounds each trip.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

To Pay Michigan Central Notes.

An issue of $8,000,000 of one-year 5 per cent. notes of the Michigan Central Railroad matures tomorrow, and the same will be paid, the Government having already made advances to the road on rental account sufficient to cover the payment.

Motor Stocks Gain Ground.

Followers of the motor stocks took fresh courage over the manufacturing situation, and helped in the rise of the market. General Motors advanced quickly from 121 to 126 and Chevrolet from 120 to 125. At the close General Motors retained a net improvement of 2 points, and Chevrolet 4 points. Studebaker turned back from its rather uncertain course of late and held a large fraction of the day's upturn at the end of the session, and Pierce-Arrow did the same.

Professionals Seek Profits.

Trading in stocks yesterday afternoon was of a sort which seemed to reflect an increased activity of short sellers. The vigorous rise of the morning, on top of the generous advance last week, made certain issues a shining market for the seekers of quick profits on the short side. On the Exchange floor it was rumored that professional traders set out to take a slice off some of the more buoyant stocks, and the elimination of much of the day's gross gains in the process indicated a fair amount of success for the sellers. Even with this pressure the market as a whole closed considerably better than at Saturday noon.

Foreign Government Bonds Strong.

Practically all of the foreign Government bond issues were strong yesterday and made advances of more than a point compared with Saturday's closing figures. The Anglo-French 5s sold up to 93 and closed at 92⅝, a net gain of ⅝, as against 91¾ Saturday, a closing quotation. The bonds of the Cities of Lyons, Bordeaux, and Marseilles sold up to 90 and closed at 89¾. The French Government 5½s, which were quoted at 97¾ on Saturday, changed hands at 98¼, which was the final quotation.

Gold and Mexico.

The difficulties of doing business in Mexico under the changing statutes of that country was emphasized yesterday in news that the Federal Reserve Board had declined to permit the American Smelting and Refining Company to increase its monthly gold shipments across the border. For some months the company has been sending about $500,000 gold bars to Mexico, representing the full value of gold and 25 per cent. of the value of silver mined and taken by the corporation from that country. The law covering this provision was recently altered so that 50 per cent. of the value of the silver must be returned in gold. The Federal Reserve authorities do not desire to see the outflow increased. It is expected that negotiations will be undertaken with the Mexican Government to ameliorate the new rule.

City of Boston Notes Offered.

The National City Company is offering $2,000,000 of City of Boston 5 per cent. notes, dated May 16, 1918, and maturing Nov. 1, 1918, at a price to yield 4.70 per cent. The notes are issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes and are exempt from all taxation in the State of Massachusetts and free of all Federal income taxes.

Call for $4,000,000 Sugar Loan.

Members of the syndicate of banks and bankers participating in the $100,000,000 loan to Cuban sugar growers were called on yesterday to deposit $4,000,000 on Friday. Last Friday the syndicate members paid in $10,000,000. About a week ago there were sold more than $6,000,000 of the sugar acceptances. Part of the money paid in by the 188 participating banks and bankers is used as direct advances.

Rochester and the Liberty Loan.

The Chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee of Rochester, N. Y., announces that the city had received an honor flag and that its subscriptions to the Third Loan aggregated $17,115,200, compared with an allotment of $15,668,000. He observes that in the first loan Rochester had 60,938 subscribers, or about 24.4 per cent. of the population, while for the Third Loan its subscribers numbered more than 96,000, or more than 40 per cent. of the population.

The Old Order Changed.

There are six very large, handsome, and well-located offices on lower Broadway in whose windows appear signs saying "For Rent—Apply U. S. Railroad Administration, Real Estate Advisory Commission." They are the downtown offices of the New York Central, the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore & Ohio, the Lackawanna, the Lehigh Valley, and the New Haven. In future all downtown seekers of railroad tickets must foregather in the rotunda of 42 Broadway.

Waiting on Washington.

The annual meeting of the Erie Railroad Company, already once postponed, was put over again yesterday until May 27, in the hope of giving the stockholders something concrete regarding the contract with the Railroad Administration on which they might take action. The negotiations, from all accounts, are still continuing, and may not be heard from until the first of June or later. However, railroad men generally will not begin to grow impatient until the first of July approaches, when too many of them will have to consider dividend action on rather uncertain data.

Pipe Line Operations in April.

Petroleum sent from the wells through pipe lines east of the Mississippi River in April amounted to 2,021,641 barrels, according to records of the Oil City Derrick. The total was 20,585 barrels more than in March, and the largest April crude oil "run" in four years. Deliveries into consuming channels during the month aggregated 3,548,364 barrels, which made a total somewhat less than in the preceding month.

Extra Pacific Mail Dividend.

Some of the men closest to the affairs of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company were taken by surprise yesterday by the declaration of another extra dividend on the common stock, this time of $1 a share, or 20 per cent. on its par value. It had been supposed that, although the company's earnings still amply justified such a disbursement, the uncertainties of the shipping situation would impose an extremely conservative policy. The company has seven of its ten steamers under requisition by the United States Shipping Board, and while the charter rate paid for these seven is considered liberal, and the other steamers are still, even under the present restricted rate schedules, making money, the company, like other big shipping concerns, is feeling the caution of the Shipping Board's policy in paying compensation for its services in handling, as operating agent for the board, its own requisitioned steamers, which it is running for Government account. The extra dividend will make a handsome addition to the income and working capital of the American International Corporation, which, jointly with W. R. Grace & Co., owns a majority of the outstanding Pacific Mail common stock.

Effect of War Pictured.

Adrian Iselin & Co. have just issued a very carefully prepared and mounted graphic chart, showing on an equivalent scale of values the effect of the war on industrial and economic conditions. The method followed is to show the fluctuations, from Jan. 1, 1912, to Dec. 31, 1917, of the prices of silver, copper, wheat, cotton, The London Economist index of commodity prices, Bradstreet's Index, and of a series of leading industrial and railroad stocks, such as Anaconda Copper, American Can, Mexican Petroleum, General Electric, General Chemical, United States Steel, St. Paul, and Union Pacific. All the spectacular leaps and falls of the big war market of 1915 and 1916 are clearly to be seen. One of the most interesting deductions to be made from the chart is the relative stability of the cotton market, which has come in for so much criticism of late, when compared with the price fluctuations in wheat, or even some of the least spectacular of the war stocks.

OPPOSES GUARANTEE OF BANK DEPOSITS

Clearing House Asserts Senate Bill "Puts Premium on Incompetence."

"AGAINST COMMON JUSTICE"

Protest Says Proposed Law Would Impose Unjust Burden on Conservative Management.

Walter E. Frew, Chairman of the Clearing House Committee of the New York Clearing House Association, made public yesterday a copy of a protest made against the passage of Senate Bill 4,426, which provides for the guarantee of bank deposits. This protest has been signed by every one of the fifty-eight members of the association, and copies have been forwarded to Senators and Congressmen representing the State of New York, and to members of the Banking and Currency Committees of both Houses.

"Senate Bill 4,426 now pending in the United States Senate," the protest says, "puts a premium upon incompetence. It proposes that the Government of the United States guarantee all deposits in national banks of $5,000 and less, and that the Government guarantee up to $5,000 in all deposits in excess of that amount; of course this guarantee is to be made good at the expense of the conservatively managed and successful banks.

"Should such a proposition be enacted into law, any national bank, however inexperienced its official managers; however limited its capital resources compared to the field of its activities; however given to risky adventure; however venturesome in buying deposits by paying excessive rates of interest; however wanting in the proven qualities which time and experience have shown to be indispensable to successful bank management, such a bank would, nevertheless, be able to solicit business, truthfully claiming that their deposits were protected, as above stated, by the combined financial strength of the whole national system. Good banks would thus be compelled to give of their strength to induce the creation of and then to support incompetent rivals.

"Such a proposition is in violation of common justice and common fairness. The stockholders in a bank in one locality would be mulcted in loss to compensate for the mismanagement of banks hundreds or even thousands of miles distant and over which no mutual control or relationship exists.

"Our people should be allowed to exercise wholesome discrimination in the banks they select, as well as in their business activities in general. Individuality and individual initiative are cardinal qualities of success, and these qualities would be impaired if people are to be taught by legislation to rely upon the Government to help them in their ordinary individual transactions and in the exercise of ordinary judgment.

"The said bill is wrong in principle; it imposes an unjust burden upon conservative bank management, and would exercise a deleterious influence upon every community, should it become law."

A similar protest has been issued by the Clearing House Committee of the Chicago Clearing House, of which James B. Forgan is Chairman.

$76,175,323 DUE ON LIBERTY 4S TOMORROW

Initial Semi-Annual Interest Payment Calls for That Sum—Lower Prices for Bonds.

The initial semi-annual interest payment on the twenty-five-year 4 per cent. bonds of the Second Liberty Loan is due tomorrow. The payments on the outstanding issue of $3,808,766,150 of bonds will amount to $76,175,323. Holders of bonds may cut off the coupons and deposit them with their banks, or else have them cashed, either at their banks or at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, 120 Broadway.

Owners of the 4 per cent. bonds who convert them into bonds bearing interest at 4¼ per cent. per annum will receive securities bearing the same maturity, namely, Nov. 15, 1942, and semi-annual interest payments will be made on May 15 and Nov. 15.

Both the 4 per cent. bonds of the Second Liberty Loan and the 4 per cent. "conversion" bonds of the First Loan made a new low record yesterday on the Stock Exchange. They sold down to 94.60, or $946 per $1,000. The so-called "First Fours" closed at that figure, while the "Second Fours" closed at 94.70. The net loss for the day in the case of the former was 1.04 and in the latter .90.

The latest issue of war bonds, namely, the 4¼s of the Third Liberty Loan, also made a new low record yesterday, when it sold down to 97.80. When trading in this issue was first begun last Friday, the price was 99.10, and on transactions of $4,842,000 for two days, (Friday and Saturday,) the price dropped to 98.20, which happened to be yesterday's opening quotation. The net loss for the day was .40, the bonds closing at 97.80.

More than half the people of Hoboken, N. J., subscribed to the Third Liberty Loan, according to a report made public yesterday by John K. Anderson, Secretary of the Hoboken committee. The report shows that there were 36,891 subscribers out of a population of about 70,000. The percentage is placed at 52. The total subscriptions for Hoboken amount to $4,742,550.

FINDS LIBERTY BOND RATE FAIR

Lawrence Chamberlain Sees No Reason to Exceed Present Rate.

Lawrence Chamberlain of Hemphill, White & Chamberlain, in an address last night before the Maryland Society, at the Waldorf-Astoria, declared that the Treasury Department might without fear stand its ground at the 4¼ per cent. rate for an indefinite number of future war loans. He thought that there would be no need of the Government raising the rate.

"It is my observation, after speaking in about 160 cities on the three loans," said Mr. Chamberlain, "that the American people have at last learned the major issues. Their eyes are on the end rather than on the means of this war, so that they no longer question the terms of the investment involved in the purchase of Liberty bonds, but buy them as a holy duty and a national privilege. Therefore I believe the Treasury may without fear stand its ground at the 4¼ per cent. rate for an indefinite number of future loans, thereby protecting the securities markets and the great fiduciary institutions, and checking the inflation from abnormal forms of rediscount accomplished through the War Finance Board or otherwise.

"What we have most to fear is the paralysis of patriotic initiative caused by the dread of unknown rates of taxation through retroactive measures—for taxes are matters of cash, but income may not be, and if taxes absorb too large a part of the income reward of risk assumed, the incentive to assume risks for the benefit of national production is lost."

NO FINAL LOAN TOTALS YET.

Secretary McAdoo Extends the Reporting Period Until May 15.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—The Treasury Department was unable to give out tonight, as was expected, the final totals of the Third Liberty Loan subscriptions. By the terms of the Treasury circular announcing the loan, the banks and trust companies had until May 9 to prepare and send in their reports of subscriptions, and the Federal Reserve banks were to have until today to tabulate and forward returns. None of the Reserve Banks was able today to finish its report.

Some of the banks have a very large proportion of the total subscription yet to tabulate and classify. In order to comply with the plan to have final reports in by today, the banks said that they would be forced from want of a sufficient clerical force to hold back a very large amount of subscriptions. This would be equivalent to rejecting these subscriptions, and it became necessary for Secretary McAdoo to notify the Federal Reserve Banks that they might have until Wednesday, May 15, in which to complete their reports.

The third loan, although it was free from many characteristics that added materially to the amount of clerical work at the close of the subscription period, embraced such a very large number of small subscribers and such a large proportion of installment subscriptions that nearly as great a load of work was laid upon the banks at the close of the campaign as formerly.

No figures are yet available of even an approximate total of subscriptions, but the gradual increase of the grand total in the tentative reports that have come to the Treasury Department seem to afford a reasonable justification for the expectation that the final total will be well past the $4,000,000,000 mark. Up to today the Treasury had received $377,442,000 from bond sales.

CHANGE IN EXPORTING FIRM.

Two of Three Founders of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore Retire.

The elimination of two of the three founders of the business of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore, Inc., and the entrance of powerful new financial interests were announced yesterday afternoon following a meeting of the Directors at the Guaranty Trust Company. William H. Williams and J. A. Wigmore, both of whom have served as Vice Presidents and members of the board, are the retiring officials.

It was announced after the meeting that Hornblower & Weeks, who have a firm member on the board in James J. Phelan of Boston, had purchased a substantial amount of the holdings of Messrs. Williams and Wigmore for new interests in the company. Harry Payne Whitney and G. M. Dahl, the latter a Vice President of the Chase National Bank, succeeded the retiring Directors on the board, and another new member will be added to represent the new stockholders.

The firm of Gaston, Williams & Wigmore was formed on Oct. 10, 1914, to handle a large export business which had been obtained by George A. Gaston from foreign Governments immediately following the outbreak of the war. As the business expanded, the company was incorporated with 300,000 shares of stock of no par value, and entered the steamship field with the Globe Line, operating numerous vessels. The company has recently completed a five-story building for its own use at 39 Broadway. President Gaston said after yesterday's meeting that there would be no change in the name or business of the corporation.

NEW PACIFIC MAIL DIVIDEND.

Regular Semi-Annual Payment of 50 Cents and Extra of $1 Voted.

Directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company yesterday declared the regular semi-annual dividend of 50 cents on the common stock of the company and an extra dividend of $1, both dividends payable June 15 to stockholders of record June 1. On December 26 last the company paid an extra dividend of $2.50 on the common stock, which has a par value of $5 a share. The by-laws of the company provided that no dividends shall be paid on the common stock outstanding until there has been accumulated from earnings an amount equal to three years' normal dividends on the preferred stock, which is 7 per cent. cumulative, par value $100.

The company at present has outstanding $1,700,000 of the preferred and $1,150,000 of the common stock, of which latter approximately 50 per cent. is held jointly by the American International Corporation and W. R. Grace & Co. Its net income for 1917 was $1,554,632 after all charges, and while indications have been that this year, with seven of its fleet of ten steamers under requisition by the Shipping Board, its earnings will not maintain that level, the requisition charter rates are sufficient to assure the present dividends.

RAY COPPER EARNINGS DROP

Net Profit of $1,105,862 in Quarter Declines $2,370,717.

The Ray Consolidated Copper Company reports a net profit of $1,105,862 in the March quarter, a decline of $2,370,717 from the corresponding period last year. The management disbursed $1,577,179 in dividends, resulting in a deficit of $471,317, compared with a surplus of $1,899,400 a year before. Before figuring the profit, the company set aside $542,844 to meet Federal, State, and county taxes.

The report issued yesterday showed that the average cost of producing 20,522,558 pounds of copper during the quarter was 15.307 cents a pound, against 13.636 cents for the 21,071,874 pounds turned out in the last quarter of 1917. In explaining one reason for the sharp decline of earnings, the report said:

"All sales of copper reported for the quarter were made at 23½ cents a pound. That price, however, has only been fixed to apply until the first of June, and, therefore, no sales can be recorded at any definite price beyond that date. This situation made it impossible to determine definitely the value of considerable quantities of copper which at the end of the quarter had been specified on Government orders for delivery after June 1, and such copper so specified was included in the unsold inventory.

"For this reason the reported sales for the quarter were not equal to the production, (whereas the reverse was true in the preceding quarter,) and accordingly there was a substantial increase in the amount of copper inventoried as unsold and carried at 13¼ cents per pound. This is reflected in the stated earnings, which are correspondingly less than the amount that would have been arrived at by applying to the quarter's production the difference between the stated cost of 15.307 cents a pound and the present Government price."

CONFER ON DENVER PLANS.

Representatives of Road and Equitable Trust Company Meet Here.

A conference was held yesterday between representatives of the present management and majority stock ownership of the Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company and of the Equitable Trust Company, which as trustee for the Western Pacific bonds guaranteed by the Denver & Rio Grande holds a judgment for approximately $37,000,000 against the latter road, at which the practical working out of the plan approved last Saturday at Omaha by Judges Sanborn and Lewis of the United States District Court, for regularizing the financial position of the Denver was taken under consideration.

The plan calls for the wiping out of some $4,500,000 of outstanding indebtedness of the Denver & Rio Grande, which includes all floating obligations up to and including June 1, except the Equitable Trust Company's judgment. This is done by means of an advance of $1,500,000 by the Railroad Administration on account of the Denver's commandeered rental, an advance of $1,800,000 made by the Equitable Trust Company, the purchase by the Equitable of certain treasury securities of the Denver—principally Liberty bonds and Utah Fuel bonds—the release, by order of the court, of some $625,000 in cash in the Denver's treasury, hitherto under attachment, and the employment of some $900,000 on deposit with the trustees for Denver bonds. Included in this $4,500,000 thus taken care of is $2,400,000 of bond interest, either unpaid or due June 1.

NEW CERTIFICATE ISSUE.

McAdoo Announces an Issue Dated May 15, Maturing June 25.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Secretary McAdoo announced today the issue of Treasury certificates of indebtedness to be dated May 15 and maturing June 25, 1918. This issue brings the total volume of certificates maturing on that date to $1,480,000,000, which is safely within the limits of receipts by that date from sales of bonds and collections of war taxes.

In this connection it is accepted that regularly, through the duration of the war, the Treasury balance will stand in large figures, and the money power of the Government will in any emergency be equal to whatever demand may be made upon it. The operations of the Treasury thus far as expressed in the grand total of sales of Treasury certificates, reach $7,577,717,000. None of the belligerent powers has been able, as the United States has, to go out to the banks of the country at a moment's notice and exercise credit to the extent that is shown in our Treasury statements.

The certificates maturing May 15 are acceptable by the Government in payment of income and excess profits taxes, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, and in all respects identical with the certificates dated April 15, 1918, except as to the date of issue and from which they bear interest. In the meanwhile Federal Reserve Banks are authorized to issue interim receipts calling for definitive Treasury certificates dated May 15, as above, instead of certificates dated April 15. This will relieve subscribers for certificates of this character of the necessity of paying so much on account of accrued interest.

Subscriptions for these certificates at par and accrued interest will be received by Federal Reserve Banks, and they are authorised until further notice to make allotment in full and receive payment with the subscription. More than $70,000,000 of the certificates dated April 15 have been sold to date.

GETS LOAN AT 6 PER CENT.

New York Central Had Told McAdoo 7 Was Best to be Had.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Director General McAdoo today issued a statement with regard to the application of the New York Central Railroad for authority to issue $6,000,000 collateral trust notes for six or twelve months to pay certain obligations maturing this week.

The Director General was informed by the company that the best terms on which the money could be obtained at this time would be 7 per cent. per annum. The Central was advised that a 7 per cent. rate on notes of this character was not justified, as such a transaction would encourage high rates for money. Mr. McAdoo, the statement says, thereupon made inquiry of the Central Trust Company of New York as to whether it could arrange to place the $6,000,000 needed by the New York Central for six months at 6 per cent. per annum interest, and was promptly informed that the Central Trust Company would gladly provide the funds on the terms suggested.

Canadian Trade With the U. S.

Extract from a recent editorial in the New York Sun

"Even as we fight the enemy of mankind, we plan and act to expand our commerce with the world; and there is no richer prize for this country than the Canadian market. For years before the war Canada had been buying from us at an increasing pace not approached by any other country. While we were dreaming of Latin American markets Canada had come to be a larger customer of the United States than all the rest of the nations of the Western hemisphere put together. The rewards of our barter with the hundreds of millions of people in the Orient had become a bagatelle to what we were gaining from Canada. . . . And after the war, if we are not so selfish as to disregard a duty and such fools as to throw away the opportunity, Canada will yet lead all."

Calico Dresses Gaining Favor.

Though many local manufacturers of dresses for women have, at least in effect, sneered at the possibility of calico becoming the big thing in Summer dresses, it seems that the popularity of these garments is gaining headway every day. Though at the beginning of the season few buyers would have anything to do with them, now the demand seems to be quite general, though as yet calicoes are not taken in very large quantities. Simple tailored effects are so far the most sought in these garments, and material designs include polka dots and small figures. Navy blue is a popular background for white dots. In others the bright shades are preferred.

Leading Fall Colors for Waists.

These colors have been selected from the standard American color card by the United Waist League of America, including the most representative manufacturers of these goods in the country, as the best shades for the waist trade for the coming Fall season: Navy, castor, taupe, prune, seal, ecru, evergreen, old china and silver. The selections of the league's Color Committee were made after a careful inspection of the colors being sold for the coming season by the woolen trade.

Dividend by Textile Alliance.

A dividend of 40 per cent., as of April 1, for the fourth period—twelve months—of the activities of the Textile Alliance, Inc., has been declared by the Directors of that organization on charges collected during the year ended with the date given. At the meeting at which the dividend was declared the Board of Directors re-elected A. M. Patterson as President; F. A. Fleisch, Vice President; W. C. Bates, Secretary, and J. J. Nevins, Treasurer. The Executive Committee of the alliance was reappointed by the board, which also approved the appointments of R. M. Johnson as Assistant General Manager and W. B. Denton as legal assistant to the General Manager.

Soft Materials for Petticoats.

Reports from the local underskirt trade indicate that various soft materials are just now having a very substantial run of popularity. Silk jersey seems to be among the most favored of these fabrics, the lighter weights, of course, being those taken. Washable satins are also very much in demand. Though many of these skirts are taken in solid colors, some stripes and quite a few flower designs, usually of the small variety, are also selling. Hemstitched and pleated flounces seem to be about equally popular. Though the skirts are rather short, they are usually made quite full.

Gray Goods Prices Firmer.

Prices are gradually growing firmer in the local gray goods market as the merchandise in second hands is being cleaned up, and with the improvement is coming an increasing interest in what the mills have to sell. Second-hand lots of 38½-inch 60-48s, for instance, are about exhausted here, with the result that both Northern and Southern goods of this construction sold yesterday for May shipment at 15½ cents. Late in the day they sold for the same shipment at 15¾ cents. Spot lots of Southern 38½-inch 64-60s sold from second hands during the day at 18 cents. Coarse goods were again without feature, but a nice business was done on sateens and twills for shipment in May, June, and July. Mill prices on print-cloths closed this way:

39-inch, 80-80s....24c	38½-inch, 64-60s..18c
39-inch, 72-76s.....22c	38½-inch, 64-56s..16¾c
39-inch, 68-72s.....19c	38½-inch, 60-52s..16c
39-inch, 50-44s.....14¾c	38½-inch, 60-48s..15¾c
58½-inch, 64-64s..18½c	27-inch, 64-60s.....12¾c

Fewer Silk Hats Made.

It is reported in the local trade that quite a few manufacturers of silk hats for men have almost entirely discontinued making this type of headgear and have gone into the manufacture of silk sailors and other hats of silk for women. This is said to be due to the fact that sales of silk hats for men fell off very considerably last Winter. It seems that most men who found they had to buy an evening hat of some sort took collapsible opera hats. On the other hand, women are said to be wearing silk sailors and other silk shapes more and more, and at least while the war lasts it is thought that this will be the most profitable branch of the silk hat industry.

Straw Sailors for Women.

As the season progresses and the vogue for smart suits in military effects and neat fitting tailored dresses becomes more pronounced, the demand for trim sailors of straw seems to be increasing everywhere. Rather high crowns and narrow brims are apparently the order of the day in these hats. Bright colored silks in Hindu turban effects are usually employed for bands. The colors most favored for straw hats are said to be various tan shades, green, blue, and lavender. There are also quite a few natural straws taken.

Shell Pink Satin Hats Seen Here.

Hats of shell pink satin are being displayed here for sport or street wear. These hats appear very "smart," and are said to be "wearable" with almost any soft Summer frock. They are shown in large sailors, large and medium-sized mushrooms—some with short backs—and in large shapes with short backs and fronts and wide sides. Facings of pink Milan hemp are sometimes used. The crowns are collapsible, some shell crowns and some cuff crowns being seen. Round white beads, ribbon bows, appliquéd flowers and fruits, and wool and silk floss stitching are used as trimmings. Sometimes tassels of wool are used, and some hats are embroidered in either pink or white soutache braid.

When They Should Watch Out.

Retail credit men should always be on the lookout for a "smash," according to one of them, when there is a sudden change on the part of a charge customer in the character of the merchandise bought. If a man who has been in the habit of buying shirts priced around $2 to $2.50 suddenly starts buying, in small quantities, shirts costing twice or three times that sum, the credit man in question says it is because the customer sees bankruptcy ahead of him and is "out to stick his creditors." However, he buys in small quantities in an endeavor to avoid suspicion. Seven times out of ten, the credit man asserts, a shift of this kind ends in trouble for the store. New accounts started by young men of moderate means are said very frequently to be trouble makers when the purchases are small, but of high-priced merchandise.

Why Penalties Are Incurred.

F. C. Backus, Secretary of the National Jewelers Board of Trade, has sent this explanation to members as to why so many jewelers are being penalized for late payment of the monthly jewelry taxes: "In many instances this is not the result of an oversight, but because of the failure to realize that payment is only made to the Government when the check of the taxpayer has been cashed and deposited to the Government account. In consequence, it is advised that payments made by uncertified checks should be in the hands of the Collector four or five days in advance of the final date of payment, so that the check can go through the banks and the amount be credited to the Government account before the due date. Uncertified checks paid to the Government on the last day of the month will occasion a penalty for late payment."

TO SETTLE LOCAL STRIKES.

War Labor Board Announces Plan for Arbitration.

WASHINGTON, May 13.—Plans for the settlement of local industrial disputes which might interfere with the nation's war program were announced today by the National War Labor Board in compliance with President Wilson's labor proclamation of last April 8.

The plan provides for the appointment of local arbitration committees in industrial cities and districts and of two-member sub-committees of the board itself to act in controversies which the local committee cannot settle. These committees will be assisted by trained field agents sent out from Washington to investigate each dispute.

The War Labor Board will act as the Supreme Court and will hear cases only when its sub-committees are unable to settle a controversy or when one side or another makes an appeal from their decisions or those of the local committees.

The sub-committee of the board will be composed of one from the employers' side and one from the employes' side. Provision is made for the selection of an umpire, who will render an award in case the board finds it impossible to reach a conclusion concerning a case which has been referred to it by the regular committees.

$80,000 TO JERSEY FARMERS

Public-Spirited Citizens Start Loan Fund for Small Borrowers.

The New Jersey Patriotic Farmers' Fund has just been established with approximately $80,000 at its disposal for small loans to deserving farmers who cannot obtain money or credit through regular business channels. The contributors to the fund are public-spirited New Jersey citizens, who say they feel that in no more practical way can they give expression to their patriotism than by making possible the production of staple foods which could not or would not otherwise be raised. It is expected that this consideration will lead others within the next few days to increase the fund to $100,000 or more.

Loans will be granted on the recommendation of local loan committees, composed of three men. No borrower will receive more than $200. The notes will bear interest at 6 per cent. and mature in six months subject to renewal only in exceptional cases. The food produced with the money advanced will be pledged as security for the repayment of the obligation. Assistance will be given solely for the production of staple foods which are so imperatively needed in these critical times.
